As the crucial balloting began in humid, steaming convention hall it became more evident that a stop-Dewey coalition had not jelled.

On the first roll call it was Dewey 434, Taft 224, Stassen 166. On the second ballot Dewey had gone up to 515 and Taft to 274, while Stassen dropped to 149.

At that point the convention recessed for three hours, a move engineered by Taft, Stassen and other anti-Dewey leaders to give them time to decide whether or not to continue the fight.

When the convention reconvened for the third roll call the stop-Dewey drive had changed to a nominate-Dewey stampede. Sen. John Bricker of Ohio was the first on the rostrum to withdraw the name of his state's candidate, Senator Taft. This was swiftly followed by similar withdrawals by Warren, Stassen, Vandenberg and MacArthur.

GOVERNOR WARREN
. . . He accepted . . .

On the third ballot the 1,094 delegates to the convention nominated Gov. Thomas E. Dewey as their unanimous choice to run as the Republican candidate for President in 1948.

Warren

Selection of Gov. Earl Warren of California as the Republican nominee for vice-president came as a complete shock to almost everyone, despite the fact that the choice was a logical and reasonable one.

Warren was a surprise pick because prior to the convention he had maintained stoutly that he could not afford to take the vice-presidency and would not accept the second spot.

It was even more a departure from the norm in that the Dewey-Warren ticket failed to offer a grain of consolation to the old guard and isolationist wing of the party. Warren has strongly internationalist political views — even more so than Dewey—and has been a consistent critic of the GOP isolationists.

Initial speculation as to the vice-president spot ran to Rep. Charles Halleck of Indiana or Sen. Kenneth Wherry of Nebraska, both of the "conservative Republican" tradition.

But in the night-long pow-wow that followed the Dewey nomination it was Warren who was chosen. Dewey himself averred that he had not influenced the choice, that the party leaders had become convinced that the California governor was the best bet.

Nevertheless, Dewey had had to make certain promises in order to get Warren for the job: The vice-presidency, he said, no longer would be the stale, flat and unprofitable post it has been. He planned to make Warren a "full partner."

Significance

Whether the GOP convention constructed its policy platform to fit the candidates or nominated the candidates to fit the platform is, of course, an impossible question. Nevertheless, the Republicans managed to do both.

Categorically, the platform is a sound, forward-looking one in the light of the issues, both foreign and domestic, to be faced.

Strongly internationalist and bipartisan in tone, it rejects the old line of isolationism for isolationism's sake and upholds the European recovery program.

That foreign policy stand, harmonizing as it does with the previously stated convictions of Dewey and Warren, may stand as a historic milestone in development of the Republican party.

NOMINEE

Dewey Runs on Calculated Ambition

Thomas Edmund Dewey is a success story in himself, featuring the kind of success that is achieved not happenstance but through precisely calculated ambition spearheaded by precisely directed energy.

At 46 he has been elected governor of New York twice and defeated once for the same office. Moreover, he has received the Republican presidential nomination twice in succession.

It is the only instance in the history of the Republican party where a defeated presidential candidate was nominated to run again.

Born in Owosso, Mich., Dewey achieved prominence in New York City as a racket-busting district attorney.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Our old house is full of chemneys, some of which we would like to use occasionally. They don't smoke, but they are open with no damper, so that they really consume warm air and fuel. Can a damper be purchased that will not require taking out half the chimney to install

ANSWER: That cannot be done in a chimney that is already built. If you wish to close off the fireplace opening much of the time, have a sheet metal panel made to fit the opening that can be taken out when the fireplace is to be used. This panel will prevent the escape of warm air up the chimney.

QUESTION: I have a large window, the pane of which when broken is expensive to replace. I am wondering if it would be practical to put in a vertical strip to divide the sash, thus using two panes half the present size. Could I do it myself?

ANSWER: It would be best to take the sash to a millwork shop to have the mutin bar inserted there. The sash will have to be grooved to hold the bar in place. If there is no mill handy, a competent carpenter should be able to do this for you.

QUESTION: How do you remove black marks on a varnished floor caused by bed rollers?

ANSWER: Rub lightly with a handful of very fine steel wool moistened with turpentine, then touch up the spots with a little paste wax.

QUESTION: Could I use a lacquer paint on my concrete floor? The cement work is a home job, and it seems to be coming off in spots. It washes off like pieces of sand or small stones.

ANSWER: Give up the idea of painting the floor with lacquer. You might be able to pour a new topping coat on the present floor, since it probably is rough enough already. It might be better to break it up and use it as a base for a new surfacing.

'Tarzan's' Bed

Johnny "Tarzan" Weismuller is reported to have the biggest bed in Hollywood. It measures seven by eight feet. Actually, sleep is hindered if a bed is too small, but tall people don't have to be movie stars to remedy the situation. Extra length, extra width bedding now can be obtained at small extra cost.

Keeping Bees

Persons who are planning to go into beekeeping should consider first their personal reaction to stings, relations with the neighbors and suitability of their locality. In the early days bees were kept to supply the only natural sweet available, but they were also kept by some for observation, for the interest in their life and habits. Beekeeping is interesting, independent work, which may be practiced with supplementary agriculture or some other occupation. It is also a fascinating hobby.

Secretaries Have "Good Chance"

It is reasoned that well trained and well groomed secretaries have excellent marriage prospects because they work so closely with men. Secretaries need not dress expensively, like show girls, to impress an employer but they should be crisp looking at all times. To be avoided are, glaring nail polish, short sleeves, chewing gum, skimpy skirts, seductive necklines, high heels and jewelry that jangles, says the director of a secretarial school.

No Right-Minded Candidate Will Antagonize Newsmen

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator

CONVENTION HALL, PHILADELPHIA.—The notes for this column are inspired by a view from the extreme left wing of the Democratic platform. I do not mean that figuratively, but literally.

I am sitting in the left-hand corner of the wooden platform filled with the brass hats of the party and their friends who are gathered together to nominate a Democratic candidate for President of the United States.

The scene isn't so very different from other political conventions I have attended back to—well, never mind how far back. I have in my mind's eye a different picture. It is a platform, viewed from just about this angle, but instead of this high rostrum protruding into the hall from the middle of the wide platform there is just a wooden box with boards atop it — rough-hewn rails to fence off the speakers from the shouting delegates. The name of Abraham Lincoln is being put in nomination. This vision, let me hasten to add, is purely visionary. I did NOT cover that convention. I saw a picture of it in a book.

The scene I have been watching is no more placid. That Democrats love a Donnybrook is an old saying. No smoke-filled rooms, no private fights for them—rather a free-for-all in a wide field, even if they know what the final outcome is to be in advance.

But frankly I have been thinking about something else as I sit here in this tropical heat—that is, in the moments when I have been able to think between the flashing of the light which is the silent bell on the telephone beside the mike I am sharing with Earl Godwin. The flash of the light on the phone means someone in the ABC booth, high above us, wants one or the other of us to jump in and give a brief word-picture of what is transpiring in our immediate neighborhood, for we are in the thick of things here and, believe me, sometimes things are pretty thick.

What I have been thinking about is the lot of the newsman and the small thanks he gets for his pain and suffering in a political year. Besides being hauled and mauled by the public—his public, as the listeners of a commentator are referred to—besides that, he is under slantwise attack by the candidates when they forget themselves.

Nobody, either the partisan listeners or the politicos, ever thinks the columnist, commentator or reporter is being fair unless he is boosting his side.

Candidates, when they are in possession of their full senses, don't go around arousing the wrath of the newsmen. Even Franklin Roosevelt, who was forever needling the newspapers, always carefully explained that it was the publishers and editors and headline writers who twisted the news, not the men who wrote or broadcast it.

But sometimes candidates slip. And as we sit, perspiring under the klieg lights and trying our best to tell the truth without malice and with as much charity as possible about what is going on before us, we recall without too much rancor, the statement of the candidate who is not being unanimously nominated. On his recent trip he made one off-the-cuff remark, which prompted him to send that offending piece of haberdashery to the laundry immediately after he had thought it over.

President Truman opined to one rear-platform audience that it was almost impossible to get the facts definitely before the public "because there are certain people in the newspaper business and certain people in the radio business who have a distorted view of what the people ought to know and what the people ought to think."

It might have been better if he had worded his plaint in the language of an earlier candidate—much earlier—John Quincy Adams, who at least narrowed his charges against the press to a few papers, even though he didn't name them specifically. This offered a sop to the rest.

However, President Truman, in a previous outburst on that same western trip was specific too. He attacked the Chicago Tribune and the Spokane Spokesman-Review. In lambasting the Tribune, he was following in Franklin Roosevelt's footsteps. You may recall that on one occasion when FDR was asked a particularly sharp question by a Tribune reporter, he replied: "Oh, tell Bertie (Robert McCormick, publisher), he's seeing things under the bed."

Mr. Truman's attack on the Tribune came about this way: While travelling through Washington state, a reporter put to him a question which, although it seemed guileless, might have concealed a barb. Anyhow the President interpreted it that way when Senator Magnuson revealed that the reporter asking the question represented the Spokesman-Review.

The President knows that part of the country and the sentiments expressed by its publications. It was then that he said the Spokesman-Review and the Chicago Tribune were "the worst newspapers in the country, the Tribune having the edge." That was about as sharp a thrust as a President ever has launched at the press in modern times. It was in that connection that he also called the present congress the worst in our history, later amending it to "second worst."

It would have been kinder to the rest of us if Mr. Truman had stuck to the specific instead of adopting the sweeping generalization quoted earlier—"some people in the newspaper and radio business, etc.—"

Presidents since the time of John Quincy Adams have not been shy about airing their views concerning the Fourth Estate. But Adams, while not specific, at least narrowed the field of his complaint to "eight or 10 newspapers of extensive circulation published in various parts of the Union acting in close concert with each other and pouring forth continual streams of slander upon my character and reputation, public and private. No falsehood is too broad, and no insinuation too base, for them . . ."

PRESIDENT TRUMAN
. . . rear platform opinion . . .

President Cleveland also had his press troubles, and history admits he got a rough deal. One summer when he was governor of New York and was sweating it out at Albany, New York newspapers reported him as taking his ease at Newport.

Sometimes the newsmen do let their spleen get into their reporting, but for the most part, they follow Kipling's advice and go on the basis that you can't do a good job unless " . . . you keep your head when all about you, are losing theirs and blaming it on you."

Television may achieve what the less vivid reports conveyed by print or the spoken word cannot. Republican leaders, realizing this, sent out some pretty strict orders on that subject before their recent convention in this city. The orders were revealed by that all-seeing, all-hearing monitor of stage, screen and radio, "Variety."

Republican delegates were told not to be seen (by the eye of the television camera and thereby millions of other eyes) talking to members of delegations from other states lest the suspicious public smell a deal in the making. If they must huddle they were told to huddle unseen.

Delegates also were warned not to assume awkward positions on the floor lest televiewers deduce that handsome isn't as handsome doesn't. And most of all, they were warned not to be seen leaving early and coming late. Not overly hopeful that orders would be followed, monitors were appointed.

Since I couldn't see much of the video product, because, as a reporter I had to keep my eyes on the televiewers themselves, I can't say how well the Republicans comported themselves when televised, nor can I assay how well the Democrats, currently in the spotlight, profited by what they saw of Republican video performances last month.

And if either didn't perform with all the grace and decorum nobody can be blamed but themselves. The cameraman gets off easy. The writer and the broadcaster still will have to duck the slings and arrows of the outraged unfortunate.

A recent survey showed that radio listeners like hymns most. Probably a television survey would show that televisioners perfer hers.

Ottertail Asks for Rate Increase

The Otter Tail Power Company has announced that greatly increased operating costs have made it necessary for them to apply to the Public Service Commission of North Dakota for permission to raise the rates approximately 8%. When approval has been granted, the new rate schedules will be placed in effect in all of the towns served by the Company, in North and South Dakota and Minnesota.

Although the gross revenues of the Company have consistently shown a substantial increase, the operatimg expences have increased at an even more rapid rate, with the result that the present earnings of the Company endanger its ability to provide adequate service to its customers.

In spite of these conditons, the Otter Tail Power Company wishes to continue its expansion program—not in taking on new territory, but in providing a higher standard of service to its present customers. To provide the capital required for this expansion program, the Company must be able to show the probability of adequate earnings. Its probable earnings for the future under the present rate structure would be far too low to attract new capital.

The new rate structures would have three favorable results: uniform rates would exist throughout the Company's system; present non-compensatory rates would be raised to reasonble levels, and the earnings of the Company would be raised to levels which would assure its financial stability.

Insects Cause Food Loss

Insect pests reduced cottonseed production last year by an amount which would have provided 4,500,000 people for a year with as much fat as now is included in European diets. Each 100 pounds of cottonseed meal will replace 250 to 300 pounds of grain when the oil meal is used for livestock feed. Some authorities estimate that control of insects that attack corn would add 100 million bushels to annual yields.

Tractor Care

To keep the tractor running smoothly, one of the most important jobs is to help the air cleaner do its work. The air cleaner removes dust and dirt from the air before it passes through the engine. Farmers who clean the air cleaner and replace the oil once or twice a day when working under dusty conditions find they save money on repair bills.

Bessemer Process

One of the oldest and most spectacular of all the present processes employed in steel-making is the Bessemer process. A blast of air is blown through the molten iron, and elements such as carbon and silicon are oxidized in the intense heat that is generated. Modern converters can produce about 25 tons of steel in as many minutes in a single "blow."

Bow Hunting for Deer

At the end of the last fall season, the total number of arrow-killed deer during the 13 years of legalized bow hunting in Wisconsin was less than 1,000, considerably less than the salvaged illegal gun kill during the 1947 big game season. Today bowmen do not bag 1 per cent of the legal annual kill. More deer have been killed by automobiles than by bow hunters.

January Was Missing

Arabs and Jews Go Back to War As U.N. Truce Fails in Palestine; Truman OKs Farm Price Support

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FAILURE:
U.N. Truce

There was not peace, but once more a sword in Palestine. The United Nations truce had failed.

As the four-week interruption of hostilities between Arabs and Jews dragged somberly through its final hours, combatants on both sides were making preparations to resume warfare.

They had failed to come to terms, and that failure arose out of the fact that there had existed no political or social basis upon which a peace agreement could be rested, nor were either the Jews or Arabs particularly eager to create one.

Their attitude throughout the truce negotiations had been that the contest over whether the state of Israel should be allowed to exist must necessarily be a flat, win-or-lose battle with no middle ground solution possible.

Count Folke Bernadotte, U.N. mediator in Palestine, had tried hard, but he had had to carry out his negotiations in what might be termed a spiritual vacuum between the Jews and Arabs. There simply was no meeting of minds upon which he might have capitalized.

Before the truce expired Bernadotte had endeavored to get it extended and continue the negotiations. Israel had agreed to such an extension but the Arab league opposed it.

Previously, during the last days of the truce, the Arabs had rejected a plan submitted by Bernadotte which included an extensive revision of the now defunct U.N. partition scheme.

Bernadotte's proposal would have restored the area of Palestine to what it was before Trans-Jordan was separated from it, and that total area then would have been partitioned into independent Arab and Jewish states.

The plan, as presented, had a ring of desperation in it. It must have been obvious, even to Bernadotte, that the Arabs would not accept such a scheme, particularly since they had violently opposed the original U.N. partition idea.

Trans-Jordan was especially antagonistic to the plan, insisting that it would put the nation under at least partial jurisdiction of the United Nations, thus making it no better than a dependent state.

As Bernadotte and his staff left Palestine guns already were firing and the Holy Land had relapsed into a condition of war.

FARM BILL:
Price Support

To the accompaniment of his now customary blast at the 80th congress President Truman signed into law a farm bill that extends present price support policies for 15 months and establishes a long-range, flexible support program to begin January 1, 1950.

Signing the bill, the President said: "I wish to make it plain once again that legislation for price supports is only part of the action this congress should have taken to meet the problems of American agriculture."

Thus, he was not criticizing the farm price support bill in itself but rather giving another re-run to the familiar theme whereby he has been castigating congress for doing a little when a lot more was needed.

Congress, he said, failed to enact legislation to strengthen the soil conservation program; it did not provide the necessary funds for marketing research; it did not act on the international wheat agreement. It failed, he specified, to meet "the serious problems of rural housing, health and education."

"In the field of agriculture, as in so many others, most of the business of the 80th congress was left unfinished," Mr. Truman observed.

Under the extension bill farm prices generally will be supported at their present levels. However, the support price for cotton will drop from 92½ to 90 per cent of parity.

The idea behind parity farm prices is to insure the farmer the same buying power, compared with the rest of the community, that he had during a favorable crop period. Usually the standard interval upon which parity prices are based are the five years from 1909 to 1914.

Five other basic crops will continue to be supported at 90 per cent of parity. They are wheat, corn, rice, peanuts and tobacco.

Spending Money

As the economic cooperation administration closed its Marshall plan books on the first three months of its operation it reported that recovery shipments worth $762,747,140 were approved for Europe and China during that period.

That total is about 58 per cent of the goal originally set for the quarter, but ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman said the unspent balance would be used eventually.

Stage Manager

Rep. Hugh D. Scott Jr. of Pennsylvania has been chosen by Republican leaders as the national chairman to lead the party in the forthcoming presidential campaign. Scott is 47, a World War II veteran and represents the Germantown-Chestnut Hill district of Philadelphia in the house of representatives.

BERLIN:
Trouble

As U. S. planes continued to fly tons of food into beleaguered Berlin the East-West stalemate over Germany was solidifying in a stubborn mold.

The Russian blockade of Berlin had brought the painful German issue to a head, and both the Soviets and the western powers were anticipating that events might begin to move very rapidly soon.

There were these developments: The Communists announced that they were drawing up a constitution for a German republic and also a two-year plan to link Berlin economically with the Soviet zone.

At the same time, on the free side of the iron curtain, German political leaders were expressing their opposition to the western powers' plans for a West German federal government.

In Berlin, power cuts were ordered in the three western sectors of the city to save the dwindling coal stocks. The action was taken despite the fact that coal shipments had begun to arrive by air.

Key to the situation, perhaps, was the Communist proposal for a new constitution. The Soviet-sponsored German People's Congress of eastern Germany announced that the document would be official. In a statement the group said that "Germany is an indivisible republic made up of states and that executive power stems from the people."

That appeared to bring Soviet intentions more or less out in the open. It means that Russia apparently is determined either to force the western democracies out of Berlin or bludgeon them into an agreement whereby the Soviets would be in virtual control of the city.

REPUBLICAN:
Changes, If

Although the presidency of the United States still is far from a reality for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, the Republican nominee nevertheless is giving considerable thought to some of the problems that will face him if he does get elected to the office.

If, for instance, he is to make good his promise to sweep out "16 years of Democratic cobwebs" from the federal government, these are some of the tasks he will be expected to perform:

Replace hundreds of officials in Washington and all over the nation with men of his choice who will put his policies into effect.

Establish with congress a coordinated program of policies for all federal departments, both foreign and domestic.

Streamline government functions and eliminate duplications in the present structure of alphabetical agencies and bureaus.

It will be a gigantic task. Policies that a Republican president would have to establish would range through the current conduct of foreign affairs; domestic spending of taxpayers' money; federal relations with private business, labor and industry; housing, veterans, agriculture and social improvements.

Then there will be the matter of choosing a cabinet that will be geographically representative of the entire nation.

PRICES:
Up Again

Consumer's price index, formerly called the cost of living index, for mid-May this year rose .6 per cent above that for mid-April to reach a new all-time high, according to figures released by National Industrial Conference board.

Expressed in 1923 dollars, the purchasing power of the dollar stood at 61.3 cents in May. That represents a drop of .6 per cent from April and 7.4 per cent from June, 1947.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: What size mesh should be used for gutters, and what kind would be impervious to corrosion?

ANSWER: A quarter-inch mesh, which would keep most of the leaves out of the gutter in case there are trees close to the house. Copper is impervious to corrosion.

QUESTION: When the former tenants moved from here they scored the floors with their furniture. Is there any way I can remove the score marks?

ANSWER: Scraping with an electric floor sanding machine should take out most of the marks. If any slight hollow place remains after sanding, you may be able to make them less noticeable by building them up with several thin coats of a quick-drying varnish.

QUESTION: Can you tell me what causes the hot water faucet to vibrate with a disturbing noise when it is turned on?

ANSWER: Since the noise occurs only when the faucet is on, the trouble may be from a worn-out washer or some loose part in the faucet. Also, there is a possibility that you are overheating the water.

QUESTION: How can I remove varnish from my linoleum rug?

ANSWER: Sponge with a lukewarm solution of trisodium phosphate using about 3 pounds to the gallon of water. Let the solution stay on long enough to soften the varnish, then take up with fine steel wool. Rinse thoroughly.

QUESTION: My indirect heater is connected to the boiler, but my hot water is only luke-warm. What is the matter?

ANSWER: If you were getting hot water and the condition has developed recently, it is possible the heater jacket is clogged with sediment and may have to be taken apart and cleaned.

High Death Rate on Farms

Farm workers had an accidental death rate twice as high as workers in non-agricultural industries in 1947. The 1947 death rate was 52 per 100,000 workers, while in non-agricultural industries the death rate was 26. Total farm resident deaths were 19,500, about the same as last year. Injuries totaled about 1,800,000. Farm home deaths totaled 7,000, with approximately 1,050,000 non-fatal injuries. Motor vehicles killed 7,300 farm residents in 1947 and injured 250,000 more.

Henry's Widow Was All Out for Forced Labor!

"Do you wish to have the body cremated or buried?" the undertaker inquired, when the widow called to arrange for the interment of her late husband, Henry.

"If it's up to me, I want you to cremate the lazy rascal and put his ashes into an hour glass," the long-suffering woman replied.

"But, my good woman!" objected the undertaker, "I couldn't do that. Why that's unthinkable!"

"Unthinkable, my eye!" rejoined the widow. "That good-for-nothing loafer never worked a lick in his life, but now that he has no say in the matter, I'm going to make him to be useful at last!"

Some Things Are Worse Than Being in the Army

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Less than a month from now the draft will hit young Americans, but it will be a nudge, not a wallop. One of its chief immediate purposes is to deflect the flood of enlistments of young men from the national guard and the reserves to the regular services.

It is expected that so many eligibles will enlist rather than wait until they are invited that only between 200,000 and 250,000 will actually be requested to report or —.

Baukhage

It isn't at all strange that there is a certain amount of reluctance on the part of so many young Americans to leap to arms the moment they ascertain that their country has decided they are needed. There are no bugles blowing. No foreign tyrant has soiled the nation's honor, there is no visible sign of a "military necessity" to disturb the even tenor of their activities—sandlot, movie, poolroom, work, study or play.

On the contrary, there has been an almost steady anti-military propaganda from all sorts of sources, all the way from the paid agents of the Kremlin to the innocent idealists or the doting mothers who think that if fighting must be indulged in, it certainly should be done by some other mother's boy. The polls show these propagandists are in the minority, but they are a loud minority.

Personally, if I were advising a teen-ager I never would recommend close order drill or tossing together a batch of firing data which would produce almost as many shorts as overs, as the one most terrifically scrumptious method of whiling away a couple of years.

On the other hand, I have had more adulterated pleasure in doing quite a number of things in which were not included learning the multiplication table, cutting the lawn, making a trial balance, working a paper route, translating the chapter which begins "Caesar trans Rhenum pons fecit," or even carving the Thanksgiving turkey the first time "her" relatives came for dinner.

As I say, I can imagine several things many people would rather do than these mentioned, including military service, but having done them, most people are better for it. I admit that for one of a delicate nervous disposition, unable to adjust his personality to groups, carving a turkey for the first time before in-laws might be the worst thing imaginable. It might be the one particular thing that the particular trauma affecting that particular individual couldn't stand. Extréme psychosis might result—even a psychotic condition that would lead to homicide or some other emotional outburst that a stronger psyche could have repressed or sublimated into kicking the dog or dropping molasses on his wife's girdle.

I grant all this freely. There are men so unable to meet the simple challenge of the crowd, for instance, even those only mildly afflicted with agoraphobia, that they never could stand a simple formation like pay-call. I have known the type in civilian life so sensitive to the presence of others that although he had been drinking peacefully for hours and accepting the hospitality of say two or three acquaintances, when an additional member appeared (just when it was our subject's turn to buy a round) he would jump through a plate glass window, four stories to the street below.

Someway, he lacked the group instinct. I admit that type probably wouldn't get on in the army—long. However, I claim these are exceptions.

The majority of the problems which the youth of our land is going to have to face soon are not too tough. And they are good exercise —like parading in full kit.

Meanwhile 694,000 men, without giving more than a thought to the hardships ahead of them (197,000 of these, according to the experts, are re-enlistments and therefore should know what they are getting into) will already have joined up, thus reducing the number of those who bashfully await their Uncle's nod this year.

Thus out of the 924,000 new men needed, less than 250,000 will be drafted. And many of those who are called will not be chosen because of the number of exemptions granted.

Veterans with combat records, with 90 days service between Pearl Harbor and VJ-day, or with 18 months' service since September, 1940, will be exempt, as will anyone who has earned a combat infantryman's badge, a Purple Heart, Air Medal, or any combat medal.

Exemptions will be granted to any veteran joining an organized reserve unit, or if the nearest one which he otherwise might join is an unreasonable distance from where he lives.

There are three kinds of deferments for those planning on going to college (1) for all full-time students, until academic year ends; (2) advanced students in certain specialties; (3) four years' deferment for college students enrolling in a full four-year ROTC course or other military courses under special conditions.

There are exemptions under certain conditions for married men, high school students, scientists, engineers and reservists.

So not many young men who don't want to are going to have to serve in the armed forces of their country. At least at present there seem to be enough ready to step forward before they are actually called.

As I remarked, it is easy to understand why the average youth would rather not accept the restrictions and discipline of army life. A part of the lack of enthusiasm for soldiering is due to the long tradition in the United States that soldiering is a wartime business for all those who don't make it their fulltime business. And I use the word business because it describes a career honored in this country far above that of the professional man —the artist or the writer—and the homage rendered is even greater in comparison if a member of the military profession is involved, excepting, of course, war heroes.

This is something hard to change. But the thing we can and should combat is the propaganda referred to earlier—propaganda which is put forward in many cases for far different reasons than even the proponents realize.

Far too often objection to military service is made on the basis that it in itself is a bad thing or a wasteful thing, when the real reason behind the argument is a selfish unwillingness to take the risk or sacrifice the time and effort which the service involves.

Frequently this false reasoning stems entirely from the influence of a parent whose purely selfish possessiveness has perverted the mind of a youngster who otherwise would accept his responsibility and take his training in his stride with no more than the ordinary, harmless grousing which is as much a part of military service as the alibis at the 19th hole.

It Wasn't Like This In the Old Army

The army psychologists have been working double time ever since they discovered that it took more than guts and gunpowder to win wars, and that the winning was easier on something besides hardtack and whiskey.

In World War II, besides the best food an army ever ate, better medical attendance than the average civilian can get, and a lot more superlatives, the armed forces went in for yards and yards of colored ribbon. It did no harm, even if the British did say the Yanks got a new service stripe every time they saw a battle in a newsreel. And it helped morale.

And now something new has been added. A whole new system of chevrons in two colors have been devised for combat and non-combat non-commissioned officers. Combat leaders—squad sergeants and platoon sergeants, for example—get an inch-wide tab of green in the middle of each shoulder loop.

Despite all this, I can't help thinking of the verse that came out of a war where the prevailing color was olive drab—with the drab predominating. It goes like this: Oh the general with his shiny stars, leadin' the parade, the colonel and the adjutant a-sportin' all the braid, the major and the skipper—none of 'em look so fine as a newly minted corporal a-comin' down the line!"

Ike Couldn't Say Anything

Before the Democratic political convention, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower couldn't sit down to write a letter without reading in his newspaper the next day that that letter had been translated into an acceptance on his part to run against Truman for the presidential nomination.

Had Eisenhower written a letter saying that he often leaned back to dream about the North African campaign or to think about the decisions at Casablanca, someone would have been sure to come forth to say: "See that? He talks about a campaign—obviously hinting at the presidential race—and 'decisions at Casablanca'—get that? Casablanca is Spanish for White House!

Jay Walking Dangerous

That short distance to the corner goes a long way toward keeping people alive, American pedestrians are warned by safety experts striving to reduce the huge annual traffic death toll by curbing unsafe pedestrian acts. Approximately 11,000 persons are run down and killed by motor vehicles every year—and half of them are crossing streets and rural roads between intersections. Coming from behind parked cars and crossing the street at places other than designated crosswalks are the most dangerous things the man on foot can do in traffic, according to the accident prevention department, Association of Casualty and Surety companies. Jaywalking killed over 3 200 and injured 51,000 pedestrians in this country in 1947, the department pointed out. Walking in the roadway and crossing against the traffic signal are the next most important reasons why so many persons lose their lives or are crippled for life.

SENATOR BALL AND THE $250,000 QUESTION

The primary aim of certain national and state labor union bosses is to "get" Senator Joseph H. Ball. In public statements to the press during recent months, they have openly boasted that they would spend as high as a QUARTER OF A MILLION DOLLARS to achieve this objective in the 1948 elections.

In other words, a carefully planned insidious campaign, waged from outside of Minnesota's borders by a labor boss monopoly, will try to dictate to the voters of this state who shall be Senator from Minnesota, because Senator Ball has fearlessly dared to oppose them.

Minnesota voters will not listen to this political class monopoly. But it is necessary that Minnesota voters of all parties band together in this fight.

Fight Dollars with Work

Senator Ball's campaign committees do not have funds that begin to approach the vast amounts to be spent against him. He will depend only upon the thousands of people, including many of the rank and file of labor, in the state who believe in good government.

You can help. Talk to your neighbors and friends. Write to Senator Ball Campaign Headquarters, 510 Endicott Building, St. Paul, indicating you want to join in his campaign.

That's the way we Minnesotans can answer the $250,000 Question that threatens us from outside our state borders!

Simply mail a postcard with your name and address. A Ball-for-Senator Volunteer will then contact you.

TO ALL OUR CUSTOMERS:

LIVING COSTS have been going up and up . . and so have our operating costs. Fuel, wire, poles, transformers, wages — in fact, EVERYTHING that we use in our business has increased in cost — yet we have maintained our same low rates.

However, costs have now reached a point, where our rates, based on PRE-WAR costs, are too low to maintain a sound basis in keeping with financial safety. We must of necessity, therefore, make some adjustments in our rate schedules.

We have, therefore, applied to the Public Service Commission of North Dakota, who have jurisdiction over our operations in that state, for permission to raise our rates approximately 8%. When approval has been granted, new rate schedules will be placed in effect throughout our territory, including all of our towns in North and South Dakota and Minnesota. The North Dakota Public Service Commission will announce the dates of public hearings in the State of North Dakota.

We deeply regret the necessity for the rate increase, but we feel sure that you understand our position.

Please watch for further announcements in your local newspapers.

Milk And Cream Checks Pay LOCAL Bills

Let's keep our community cash at home! Our nearby dairy farmers, trade with local suppliers and equipment dealers, do business with local banks, and spend their BUTTER income right here in town. A powerful OLEO lobby wants to divert that locally-spent income into the pockets of a small gronp of manufacturers. This they hope to do through the repeal of Federal restrictions on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter. The interdependence of our town and its surrounding dairy farmers is in jeopardy. Be a good neighbor! Write your Senators to keep the federal oleo laws on the books!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Fighting Truman Gets Democratic Nomination, Calls Special Session; Barkley Selected as Running Mate

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Truman 'WE ACCEPT!' Barkley
In Fighting Mood Born in Log Cabin

THE PHILADELPHIA STORY

Truman-Barkley

If the Democrats hadn't known before their convention that President Harry Truman was their man they found out on the steaming Wednesday when their political show slammed through to a smashing, triumphant finish.

Harry Truman told them so, after the enterprising liberal forces of the party had spent all that Wednesday in the 105 degree heat of convention hall proving it beyond all doubt.

It looked like the Democratic party might have been completely revitalized in 12 tense hours on that last day of the convention, ending a period during which the Democrats' morale and will to win slowly had been ossifying.

The revitalization came as a result of two potent factors which actually could be reduced to one—President Truman's influence.

In the first place, in adopting the strong, positive civil rights plank in the platform the party not only repudiated the idea and spirit of reaction but also dealt an extremely sharp and real slap to the hands of the southern wing which had tried, at times almost savagely, to produce a cleavage within the party.

That action, closely followed by the nomination of President Truman to run for re-election and the nomination of Sen. Alben Barkley of Kentucky by acclamation for the vice-presidential spot on the ticket added another solid timber to the structure that the liberal elements of the party were fighting so hard to build.

Those developments were, in themselves, a complete and victorious proof that the Democrats this year intended to bring themselves before the American public as a responsible, cohesive party that would be striving for nothing less than total victory in the November election.

But it remained for President Truman to give the whole affair a significance that could not be ignored.

Fighting Finish

It was a far cry from a love fest as the Democratic clans, feuding for many months, met in the City of Brotherly Love for their 30th national convention.

After three days of strife and bickering, the conclave came to a close as a fighting President Truman triumphantly accepted his party's nomination for the presidency and then rocked Democrats and Republicans alike with an instant summons to the 80th congress to return for a special session July 26.

The convention, perhaps the most bitterly divided since 1860 and 1924, ended with a political explosion detonated by the quiet man from Independence, Mo. The explosion startled even the regular members of his own party who had engineered the nomination of Mr. Truman to the presidency.

The Democrats pinned their November election hopes on a ticket of Harry S. Truman and Alben W. Barkley. It was the 64-year-old modest, low-voiced former senator from Missouri, who had succeeded to the office upon the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1945, for the presidency. And it was the 70-year-old, soft-speaking, compromising senator from Paducah, Ky., for the vice presidency.

The President's call for a special session provided a dramatic and startling climax to the 30th convention, which had been marked by bitter debate over ferocious family differences.

The party had been ripped by infighting between northern progressives and southern conservatives over the issue of equal civil rights for Negroes. One-half of the Alabama delegation — 13 of the 26 votes — and the entire Mississippi delegation of 22 had stormed out of the convention amid boos, cheers and a great pushing and shoving. This was the high point of the widely-heralded southern revolt, although a rump convention was called to meet in Birmingham, Ala.

Discord Flares

Discord prevailed long before the 1,596 delegates from the 48 states and territories gathered in stifling, steaming Philadelphia for the quadrennial convention.

Dissident factions of the party rallied behind a concerted drive to draft Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower as the party's standard bearer. "Ike," however, removed himself from the race with his third and final insistence that he "would not accept the nomination."

The day after the Eisenhower boom collapsed, the New Deal efforts to oppose Mr. Truman with Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas also blew up. Douglas, whom the President had wanted for his running mate, flatly refused to be considered and also knocked himself out of the vice presidential running.

After Douglas declined to enter the presidential race, Senator Pepper of Florida announced his candidacy with the backing of the New Deal wing, but his bid was not considered very seriously.

Civil Rights

After seven days of wrangling, a platform pledging the Democratic party more specifically than ever before to work for basic constitutional civil rights was adopted after a floor fight which proved rather tame in view of the anticipated knock-down, drag-out battle.

The platform calls on congress to support guarantees of:

"The right of full and equal political participation" — meaning anti-poll tax legislation.

"The right to equal opportunity of employment" — another way of promising a fair employment practices act.

"The right of security of person" —meaning a federal anti-lynch law.

"The right of equal treatment in the service and defense of our nation"—meaning the end of segregation in the armed forces.

The long-heralded southern revolt, however, failed to develop into the Dixie-wide proportions predicted. Only Mississippi's 22 delegates and 13 of Alabama's 26 stalked out of the convention in protest against President Truman's nomination and adoption of the strong civil rights plank.

However, 263 remaining southern delegates registered that area's protest by voting for the presidential nomination of Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia. Size of the protest vote indicated the Democratic party still has a problem on its hands in the South.

NO LIMITS

American Cities Are Increasing in Size

Los Angeles, brunt of many jokes for its ever-expanding city limits, is not the only American city which is increasing in size.

In fact, American cities are getting bigger all the time, with 298 communities extending their boundaries in 1947 for a new all-time record, according to the International City Managers association.

The rush to keep up with urban expansion marked a 15 per cent increase over 1946, when 259 cities annexed new territory. Most cities seek to annex suburban land to solve their population problems.

"Cities want outlying territory to equalize local tax rates and to provide uniform public services," according to the association

PERSHING:

Taps Sounds

Gen. John J. (Blackjack) Pershing, who led American troops to victory in World War I., is dead at the age of 87.

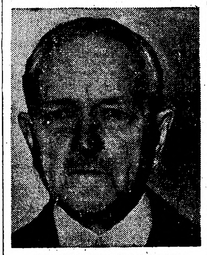
The aged former chief of staff had been ill since February, 1938, when he was stricken at Tucson, Ariz., by a form of rheumatism which affected his heart muscles. He came close to dying at that time, but rallied with a display of fighting spirit which amazed his physicians. Since then he had lived at Walter Reed hospital in Washington, D. C.

Death was caused by a blood clot which reached his lung. At Pershing's bedside when death came were his son, Warren; his sister, Miss May Pershing, and his longtime physician, Maj. Gen. Shelley Marietta.

Long the idol of a grateful nation, Pershing held the rank of general of the armies, a title conferred on only four other American soldiers, Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. He outranked such contemporary five-star generals as George C. Marshall, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and Douglas MacArthur. Their title is general of the army.

Pershing won his greatest fame as commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary force in World War I. Appointed to that post in 1917, he took personal command of the American troops sent to France. He almost immediately became involved in a dispute with other Allied commanders who wanted to break up the American army and use it to reinforce the French and British armies wherever necessary. Pershing flatly refused to let his troops lose their identity.

Born Sept. 13, 1860, in the frontier town of Laclede, Mo., Pershing was graduated from West Point when he was 26. He became a second lieutenant in the sixth U. S. cavalry and launched a career in soldiering to which he devoted his entire life. He fought Indians in the American west, Spaniards in Cuba, Moro tribesmen in the Philippines, Mexican bandits under Pancho Villa on the U. S.-Mexican border and Germans in France.



GENERAL PERSHING
Last Battle

Throughout World War II, Pershing received a full report twice a month from General Marshall, his aide of 1917. Although old and feeble, the general followed daily developments closely from his hospital room, paying particular attention to "my boys," who included Generals Marshall, Eisenhower, and George S. Patton Jr.

CROPS:

Record Output

Barring a major crop disaster, the nation will harvest another bumper crop this year, with indications pointing to a general crop production which may surpass that of the outstanding year of 1942 and the record set in 1946.

Acreage in crops is among the largest in recent years and yield prospects are good for most crops, agriculture department spokesmen said, on the basis of July 1 conditions.

An all-time record corn crop of 3,328,862,000 bushels was forecast although corn, the largest feed crop, still faces such hazards as a dry, hot August or an early frost. Previous record was 3,287,927,000 bushels in 1946.

The wheat crop prospect of 1,241,751,000 bushels represents a gain of 4 per cent from earlier forecasts. If that amount is harvested, it will rank as the second largest crop in history.

Rice will set a new acreage record and nearly equal last year's record output. Oats and barley will be well above average crops.

Bumper crop prospects are not expected to mean any immediate increase in meat supplies or any noticeable decrease in meat prices but the record harvest should mean larger meat supplies in the future.

Employment Gains

Continuing the postwar upward trend in civilian employment, 1.5 million more persons were employed in civilian occupations last April than in April, 1947, it is revealed in figures compiled by the National Industrial Conference board.

Accompanying this increased employment was a decline of more than 200,000 in unemployment over the year's period.

U. S.-Anti-Icing Program

U. S. Navy's future program for thermal anti-icing will include: advancement in designs of the present systems, development of the electrical blanket, and the use of fluids other than air for conducting heat from the primary source to the surfaces to be anti-iced, states Lieut. Com. O. A. Soli, of the bureau of aeronautics, Washington, D. C. "The operation of carrier-based aircraft is being extended to areas necessitating protection against the most adverse environmental conditions," Commander Soli said. "Operating as an all-weather weapon, the carrier-based aircraft must be equipped with icing prevention systems."

Grain Bin Housecleaning

Insects in grain bins are tiny in size but tremendous in the damage they do. The bureau of entomology and plant quarantine figures that they make away with one out of every 20 bushels of farm-stored grain, as a national average, and in some states they double that toll. The place to start in getting such insects under control is at the empty grain bin, the entomologists advise. They point out that a thorough job of housecleaning bins and spraying them with DDT, before newly-harvested grain is put in them, will get rid of hold-over infestation and give new grain a good chance to escape damage.

Darwin and Earthworms

Charles Robert Darwin (1809-1882), famous English naturalist, a short time before his death published the results of his many years of observations and experiments with earthworms. No other person has contributed so much to our knowledge of their habits, behavior and performance. His work is a classic of careful observations, painstaking experiments, and conservative deductions. His conclusions have been generally accepted, nearly every text and reference book containing some mention of his work.

Shade Fruits to Avoid Sun

Though sunshine is very important for proper ripening, it will damage most fruits seriously if they are left in it after they are harvested. To prevent such damage, farmers should place fruits in the shade immediately after harvesting. Loads of crops such as peaches, watermelons and tomatoes should be covered on their way to packing sheds or to markets.

To Ship Fudge

Homemade fudge may be shipped successfully if it is poured, while warm, into a tin pan which has been lined with several thicknesses of waxed paper. Leave sufficient paper to cover top and fudge may be lifted off by means of this top paper. The recipient who cuts the candy finds it fresh as when packed.

Song Birds Destroy Pests

Those people who say song birds aren't good for anything are in for a surprise, says Frank Fitch, Jr., wild life specialist of the Georgia extension service. As many as 66 different birds feed on cotton insects, he pointed out. Fifty-seven kinds of birds feed on the May beetle and 128 birds on wireworms.

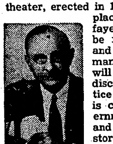
Alas, Poor Yorick, Capital Has Seen Its Last Theater

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON—As Washington hurries through summer, forced to commute to Philadelphia for its major distractions, it is faced with a painful prospect of less diversion next fall. This city which once boasted of almost a dozen legitimate theaters (when it had a much smaller population) is about to have the last one that lingered on alone turned into a movie house.

The old National theater, which opened in 1835, was burned and rebuilt four times, collapsed once, is now about to end its legitimate days on an issue which is giving the Democratic party equal concern—civil rights. The Actors' Equity, to which most actors belong, won't play here because Negroes are not permitted in the audience.

There is talk that the old Belasco theater, erected in 1895 on Madison place, facing Lafayette square, may be reconditioned and leased to a management which will lift the racial discrimination practice (the Belasco is currently government property and is used as a storehouse). If the Belasco is not reopened, Washington will be theaterless.



Baukhage

Washington's theatrical tradition began early. One of the first theaters here was the Washington theater at Eleventh and C streets. It opened in 1804 and its ads proclaiming the grand premiere added in small type: "No Segars are to be smoked during the performance."

When that edifice burned, a second Washington theater, seating 700 persons, was opened in 1821. It boasted numerous improvements and innovations, including stoves, reserved seats, improved acoustics, no liquor in the box lobbies and facilities for Negro playgoers. "Facilities" today wouldn't satisfy—accommodations would have to be on a basis of race equality.

Fourteen years after the new Washington theater had opened its doors the National theater appeared on the site of the present movie-house-to-be. It is located in the very center of what only recently has been called "downtown," on E street which meets Pennsylvania avenue just before it bumps into the treasury building, skirts its northern front and ambles past the White House.

Important clubs, hotels and restaurants are only a few blocks from the National today but when it was built, it was, like any other point in the young capital, well-nigh inaccessible in inclement weather. When it rained or snowed, Pennsylvania avenue became a mudhole. Residential areas, except those in Georgetown, weren't far from the center of town in the early 1840s, but because of the rough going (the wealthy didn't like to risk their fancy equipages out on bad nights), it cost as much as $10 to get from home to the show.

Now you can ride all the way from Capitol Hill to what was forest and farmland in 1835 for 30 cents.

The capital's greatest theatrical development began right after the Civil war and went on for three decades. By the time I attended my first show here in 1914, there was no dearth of dramatic entertainment and sometimes three original Broadway companies would be playing in different theaters at the same time. It was a good town for openings up until fairly recently.

There is one theater, now a museum, which is still a point of interest for tourists. Originally it was a Baptist church on Tenth street. In 1861 it was converted into what was called Christy's opera house. Later it became Ford's theater. In the upper stage box of this theater, President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by the actor, John Wilkes Booth.

There was a saloon on the corner below the theater where Booth was said to have had his last drink before he crept into the theater, shot Lincoln and leaped to the stage, tripping on a piece of bunting and breaking his leg.

For many years, over the bar of that saloon, hung a crude picture of the assassination, and on the floor was a metal marker where the half-mad actor was supposed to have stood as he warmed his courage in preparation for his theatric crime.

Washington theatergoers were well acquainted with John Booth's acting but better still with that of his elder brother, Edwin, who had the greater talent. But they never saw Edwin Booth on a local stage again. He was so heart-broken over his brother's crime that he never again played in the capital.

A theatrical performance in Washington plays one role that it plays in no other American city. It becomes, on certain occasions, few or many according to the taste of the incumbent president, a ceremony of state. No matter how private a president wants to be when he sees a show, he can't help being a public personage on such occasions.

The secret service, responsible for his life, wouldn't think of letting him sit anywhere but in a box where he is separated from the crowd. This, on the other hand, makes him conspicuous. One guard outside the door to Lincoln's box in the Ford theater could have prevented the assassination.

The fact that there was no provision for protection by the government in the Temple of Music in Buffalo cost the nation its President William McKinley.

Since then, the chief executive has had a bodyguard whether he likes it or not, and a bodyguard can't hide its light under a bushel. Entrance and exit from a public building become a little bit of a pageant, no matter how they are effected.

Woodrow Wilson loved the theater. He liked vaudeville and was a frequent visitor at Keith's—now one of our big movie houses. Edmund Starling, head of the secret service under several presidents, often talked to me about how much Wilson loved the theater. Starling enjoyed it, I enjoyed it, and perhaps together, we exaggerated Wilson's affection for the footlights. But Starling used to say that Wilson got more recreation from that source than any other. In his book, "Starling of the White House," he says Wilson preferred musical comedy and vaudeville to serious drama. That was the general impression among the newspapermen, I know.

Both the Roosevelts, Theodore and Franklin, were great theatergoers. Neither of them was a blushing violet as far as receiving adulation of the crowds was concerned, but for a number of reasons, largely the hectic times of the late Roosevelt's regime, the former made his attendance anywhere more of a show. Although an assassin's bullet did lay low a man in Franklin Roosevelt's entourage—Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago when both were visiting Miami—Theodore Roosevelt was himself actually shot and badly wounded on one occasion. However, this was after he left the White House and while he was making a political speech in Milwaukee.

It was the movie which drove out the later Washington legitimate theaters, but this death blow to the present-day National theater arises out of the growing demand to end segregation—a demand which made itself felt after World War I and which increased in World War II. The frequent, well-publicized controversies over lifting of the segregation ban in Constitution hall, property of the Daughters of the American Revolution and one of the few available concert halls in the city, have spotlighted Washington's segregation habits—they aren't laws.

The manager of the National theater is not closing the theater for social reasons. He simply can't book shows if he continues race discrimination and he thinks that if he raises the ban, he can't sell tickets to enough white people to make it pay.

To southerners it probably seems absurd that such a question should arise, and northerners probably will be just as surprised for the opposite reason. Washington was once a southern city, now it is a mixture of North and South and typical of neither.

Embrace, Pity, Then Endure

Before his third party's convention in Philadelphia, Henry Wallace repeated several times the assertion that he was not a Communist, that he didn't want Communist support, in fact, that he wished they'd get out of his party. For this, as some observers pointed out, Wallace was mildly spanked by the Daily Worker, mouthpiece of Muskovite communism in America.

It seems to me that Wallace is following one of Alexander Pope's quatrains in reverse. Remember Pope said:

> "Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
> As to be hated needs but to be seen,
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Having embraced the Reds, Wallace seems to be beginning to back up, through pity, and now is finding that he has to endure them, whether he likes them or not.

Slice leftover potatoes, pour over them some white sauce and grated cheese, then heat in the oven for one-half hour.

Vary bread pudding by garnishing with chopped nuts, marshmallow sauce, shredded cocoanut, or maraschino cherry sauce.

When only a few drops of lemon juice are needed, puncture fruit with a fork or sharp-pointed knife. Squeeze gently. This prevents wasting the whole lemon.

To remove bits of ground meat easily from the food chopper, follow up the meat with a small amount of stale bread. The breadcrumbs will carry away any meat which remains in the chopper.

Always a pleasure...

After watching nine exciting innings of America's greatest sport, baseball, to relax on reaching home. And . . . as you talk over the high lights of the game, that close put-out on second, the homerun and the final win by the home team . . . it's always a pleasure to enjoy a glass of cool, sparkling beer.

For beer is the kind of beverage Americans like. It belongs to pleasant living, to good fellowship, to sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it, this too, belongs to our own American heritage of personal freedom.

Thad's Feet Hurt

After a long, hard day's work on the farm, Thad's idea of how to spend an evening is to take off his shoes, and relax with a mellow glass of beer.

But his missus has other ideas. After being in the house all day, she's all for walking to the village, if it's only for a soda. Likes to see people, catch the latest gossip. But Thad says, no, his feet hurt! Began to cause unpleasantness in Thad's home.

Then Bill Webster comes up with an idea. If Thad takes the missus to Andy's Garden Tavern, Thad can relax with his glass of beer, and the missus can also chat with all the neighbors there. Each gets his (or her) own way.

Worked, too! In fact, now the missus likes an occasional temperate glass of beer herself. And Thad finds it's pleasanter to enjoy his beer with good companions, rather than alone. In fact, his feet stopped hurting too!

What is a locomotive run?

A locomotive run might be termed a "day's work" for a locomotive. In other words, it is operation of a locomotive from starting terminal, station or yard to its terminating terminal, station or yard. It is usually between two important terminals, but many locomotives double back, making a round trip from a terminal or station to the end of the line or some intermediate point and back. In other instances a run may cover movement back and forth several times over a few miles of track.

American Pearls

Pearls have so long been considered as Oriental jewels that it will surprise many to learn that specimens from the United States have been sent to Europe and even to the Orient. The famous "Queen Pearl", valued at $10,000, was found near Patterson, N. J. Pearls are found in mollusks in Maine, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and the Mississippi valley. Artificial pearls are made in France from guanin, a pearl essence obtained from the scales of large herring.

Milk And Cream Checks Pay LOCAL Bills

Let's keep our community cash at home! Our nearby dairy farmers, trade with local suppliers and equipment dealers, do business with local banks, and spend their BUTTER income right here in town. A powerful OLEO lobby wants to divert that locally-spent income into the pockets of a small gronp of manufacturers. This they hope to do through the repeal of Federal restrictions on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter. The interdependence of our town and its surrounding dairy farmers is in jeopardy. Be a good neighbor!

Write your Senators to keep the federal oleo laws on the books!

Take Care of Your Lot

An attempt is now being made by the officers of the Holt Cemetery Association to clean up the grounds of the cemetery. How well they succeed will depend on the response of the lot owners. Nothing can be done to a lot that has an uneven surface and a mound of gravel. It must be leveled off by the lot owners, We can have a beautiful cemetery here with a very little effort on each ones part if every lot is taken care off. One unsightly lot can spoil the whole scene. Then too, remember its against the state law to let weeds grow on your property.

LOOKING AHEAD
BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

How to Lose Out

The government lost $2,000,000 a day while running the nation's railroads in World War I. That's not hay! The government operators got rid of that money even though they found it necessary to jump freight rates 110 per cent! This sad experience gives you a real-life picture of what happens in America under government management of industry. Every time we try it in America, the nation as a whole is the loser.

Compare that record with the railroad management's record in World War II. This time we kept private operation and management. There was no increase in freight rates, and the railroads paid $4,000,000 a day to the federal government in taxes. This means that under private management our people were ahead at least $6,000,000 a day. That's over two billion dollars a year!

To Suffer Most

Not long ago 21 railroad unions came out with a proposal that the government take over the railroads permanently. Surely, somebody is terribly misguided or misinformed. If our union people will study the records of government management in this and other countries, they will make no such demands. Actually, the railroad unions themselves would be the groups to suffer most under government management.

Our workers have a huge stake in the American way. If private ownership of industry is worth saving, then we must do everything we can to stave off these tendencies toward Socialism and Communism.

Best Service, More Pay

Railroads in the United States and one Canadian line are the only railroads in the world that are not government owned or government controlled. Where do you have the best railroads and the best service? In America. Our railroads offer better service at lower cost than you'll find in any other nation in the world. This is true even though the pay envelope of the American railroad worker is far greater than that of railroad workers in other nations.

It would be much wiser for our unions to call for less government strangulation in the form of taxes, not for more control. It is quite possible for a slow strangling process to bring on complete government control of railroads. We must not permit that. Our workers must continue to receive the good wages and benefits that come from railroads controlled by the railroad industry, not by an agency of the government.

Experience, Not Folly

Operating expenses of railroads have soared during the past 30 years. Yet, the railroads under private ownership have increased their efficiency, to serve the public better at lower cost. Two things have resulted from this efficiency: higher wages and lower costs to the shipping and traveling public. Nobody would expect government managed railroads to do these things. And they wouldn't.

Under government operation there is no call for initiative. Competition is not allowed to play its part in keeping us on our toes. We have high standards of living in America simply because we have freedom to act and to look opportunities in the face. We invest savings and earnings, not tax money, for better tools and modernization. Our ways have paid off. A look at nations around us shows the folly of government ownership.

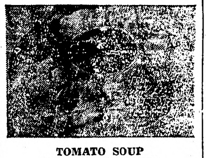
Try This Dressing On Garden Salads

With ever-welcome "garden sass" at hand to enliven meals, the homemaker's job is to sell the family, especially younger members on fresh garden salads, Mrs. R. G. Kyger writes in nationally-circulated Capper's Farmer.

Various combinations of vegetables can and should be used. Since dressing is the lifeblood of the salad. Mrs. Kyger suggests the following:



TOMATO SOUP FRENCH DRESSING

- 1 can condensed tomato soup
- Sprig of fresh tarragon
- ½ tsp. salt
- Clove garlic
- Lemon juice

Press cut clove of garlic into the salt to flavor it. Mix the salt with tomato soup. Add one sprig of fresh tarragon, if available, and any other preferred seasonings. Thin mixture to desired consistency for dressing with lemon juice—about ⅓ cup.

"Key Money" in Tokyo

In China the landlord is paid "key money" when buying or renting. The sum laid out for the privilege of getting the key often exceeds the total for many months rent. This racket now has seeped into Japan. There are few places to rent in Tokyo because of the housing shortage. Most of the rental advertisements that appear now stipulate "key money" demanded.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Berlin Crisis Nears Showdown; First Peacetime Draft Begins; Special Session Opens Campaign

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

NOT YET—BUT SOON
Josh sergeant now—but just wait a few months!

BERLIN:
Showdown

The old familiar pattern of just one crisis after another in the cold war between Russia on the one hand and the western Allies on the other was being repeated again in the Berlin showdown. But an uneasy world, watched anxiously, fearful that at any moment some crisis might explode into actual warfare.

Urgency of the Berlin crisis resulted in the recall of Gen. Lucius D. Clay, U. S. military commander in Germany, and his top political adviser, Ambassador Robert Murphy, for a first-hand report on the situation.

Clay conferred with President Truman, State Secretary Marshall and Army Secretary Royall on means of carrying out the American government's intention to stay in Berlin despite the concerted Russian drive to force the western powers out.

The official line was laid down by Secretary Marshall, who said that while the United States would not be "coerced or intimidated" by the Russian blockade of Berlin, the administration nevertheless will "proceed to reach an acceptable solution to avoid the tragedy of war."

Although rumors that the Berlin blockade might prove the spark that would enkindle fighting warfare permeated official quarters, the U. S. position appeared to be that this country hopes to avoid war. However, if the Russians are determined to cause more serious trouble at Berlin, this government is determined to resist force with force. It is equally determined to avoid taking any step which might make the situation more serious as long as negotiation and other diplomatic means remain open.

There will be many more talks, much painstaking deliberation among the western powers in connection with the exchange of notes regarding the Berlin blockade, irretrievably linked up as it is with the over-all German settlement.

Marking the high water mark in the deepening Berlin crisis and lending emphasis to the determination to back up its policy that American troops will not leave Berlin, the United States dispatched powerful reinforcements to its air arm in strife-torn Europe.

A big question mark still concerned Russia's ultimate objectives. Was the Kremlin merely trying to drive the Allies out of Berlin or was this but another step in the fundamental objective of moving the iron curtain inexorably westward, country by country, until it embraced the whole heartland of Europe?

DRAFT:
Blows Strong

America's first draftees — 1948 style—are going to be whisked into uniform so fast they won't know what hit them.

The draft proceedings will start rolling Monday, August 30, when the first of 9,500,000 youths will register. Registrations will continue on 17 designated days extending to September 18.

From these millions of men, volunteer draft boards throughout the nation will select the manpower to match the material build-up of air, land and sea forces called for under the rearmament program.

Military men are set to welcome the first draftees into their ranks any time after September 22. Under the law actual drafting cannot start until that date. The presidential proclamation setting the registration dates did not specify when inductions would begin, but they are not expected to start before October 1.

The first draftee, it is indicated, will be 25, unmarried and a non-veteran.

Registration dates specified by Mr. Truman for each age follow:

The oldest group, meaning men born in 1922 after August 30, 1922, will be registered on Monday, August 30.

Men born in 1923, August 31 and September 1.

Men born in 1924, September 2 and 3.

Men born in 1925, September 4 and 7.

Men born in 1926, September 8 and 9.

Men born in 1927, September 10 and 11.

Men born in 1928, September 13 and 14.

Men born in 1929, September 15 and 16.

Men born in 1930 before September 19, September 17 and 18.

The proclamation stated that youths born after September 19, 1930, will register on their eighteenth birthday, or within five days thereafter. About 1,200,000 youths come into this category yearly.

FOOD:
Consumes Dough

Confirming suspicions which housewives have held for many months, department of commerce analysts reported that food stores easily get a bigger part of the retail dollar now than any other business. Food stores are doing far better than before the war by taking in 27.6 cents of each dollar spent in retail channels. In 1940, by comparison, their share was 23.5 cents, according to the report.

CAMPAIGN:
Advanced

With the kickoff advanced six weeks through President Truman's action in calling congress back into special session, the American people are in for one of the most heated and intensive presidential campaigns in recent history.

The whole political calendar has been advanced this year. The President's opening message to the recalled congress signaled the initial salvo in the campaign, which will be in full swing until the November balloting.

Normally, national candidates wait until after Labor day before entering into thorough-going discussion of the issues of the campaign.

This year's campaign also became more involved with the addition of third and fourth parties to the field.

Although its ticket of Henry Wallace for president and Glenn Taylor for vice president was in the field months ago, third party adherents followed the Republicans and Democrats to Philadelphia for their nominating convention.

Rebellious southern Democrats, after walking out on their regular party conclave, gathered in Birmingham, Ala., to enter a fourth party in the field. Heading the states' rights ticket are Gov. J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina for president and Gov. Fielding L. Wright of Mississippi for vice president.

The states' rights Democrats have shown their greatest strength in Alabama and Mississippi, where a combined 20 electoral votes are pledged against Mr. Truman.

Freeze in Garden Flavor In Moistureproof Cartons

To keep the most "garden goodness" in fruits and vegetables that are to be frozen, package them carefully. This point is stressed by Miss Frances O. Van Duyne, assistant professor of foods, University of Illinois college of agriculture.

Choose containers that can be sealed tightly and won't leak. Frozen foods are better when packaged in containers that are moisture-proof and vapor-proof, Miss Van Duyne explains. Otherwise the foods dry out and lose palatability.

Cartons come in a variety of types and shapes. Rectangular or square cartons may have inner linings or have a waxed plastic finish; some are made for use with cellophane bags. Most of these are sealable with heat—by pressing together edges of covering material with an electric iron or a hand iron. The cartons are generally easy to handle and store. Waxed cups are convenient, but the seal on the set-in lid isn't moisture- or vapor-proof.

Before sealing a filled carton or bag, wipe inside edges with a clean cloth to remove moisture that would prevent a tight seal. Also press out all possible air from top of bag, then heat-seal tightly. Or you may like the pressure tapes for sealing; they have an adhesive substance on one side so that they can be stuck on edges of bags and cartons.

"Cluster City" For Atom Age

"Cluster city" is not the name of a place, but of a style of city designed especially for protection against atomic bombs.

Tracy B. Augur, a city planner and a consultant to the Atomic Energy Commission is responsible for the "cluster city" idea. Such a city, he says, would be a bunch of small cities of about 50,000 population each, all grouped together and interrelated, and separated from each other by four to five miles of open country.

Augur believes that such cities would reduce to a minimum the effect of an atomac attack and would also increase city livability.

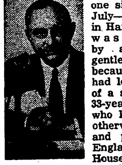
Disturbed About World? Sun Spots May Hold Clue

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—If you were disturbed over the mayhem and misunderstandings rampant in the month of July, relax, there may be a scientific explanation. Sun spots.

For the first time in 11 years, there is a maximum number of ultra violet rays about, released by eruptions on the surface of the sun-rays which may cause tempers to flare, emotions to get off balance, glands to be affected so that abnormal behaviour results. This isn't fantasy. Medical science has revealed the effects of over exposure to the ultra-violet ray.



Baukhage

Sun spots may have been responsible for the disturbances you and I read about on just one single day last July—on that day in Haiti a publisher was assassinated by an otherwise gentle young poet because the bard had lost some kind of a scholarship; a 33-year-old painter who lived near the otherwise pleasant and peaceful New England home of House Speaker Joe Martin at Attleboro, Mass., did a dance when he heard his wife was dead—it seems he had shot her in the head; here in Washington, a 22-year-old husband knocked his wife down, tried to stab her with a butcher knife, attacked an innocent passerby and started a fist fight with a policeman; a vitamin plant blew up, a prisoner became ill of benzedrine poisoning, a tanker in Chicago caught fire, Jimmy Roosevelt feuded with the other members of the California delegation and the Russians kicked up the usual fuss.

You and I probably had our own troubles—all perhaps due to nothing but the rash on Old Sol's physiognomy.

Scientists will tell you that sun spots were known by the Chinese before the telescope made them a comparatively familiar subject of astronomical concern. They are not uniform in size or shape and sometimes appear singly, sometimes in groups. A single spot may be large enough to take in our whole planet with room to spare. Groups extend over areas that may include millions of square miles.

Sun spots do not appear to have a definite duration. As a rule, they last but a short time, sometimes not more than a day. But one is recorded (in 1840-41) as having continued for 18 months. The number of sun spots varies greatly in a periodicity that is not strictly regular but that reaches an average of slightly over 11 years.

And last month Dr. Roy Marshall, director of Fels planetarium in Philadelphia, echoed an earlier suggestion made here in Washington. He said that sun spots could have a definite effect on the behaviour of people. And he reminded us that sun spots reached their last maximum frequency (before July, 1948) in 1937—when Hitler started his blitz.

It was several years ago that no less an institution than the conservative and careful Smithsonian, the capital's great scientific organization, speculated on the possibility that there might be a relationship between sun spots and wars, as well as sun spots and weather. Weather affects crops, crops affect economic conditions. Sun spots which release ultra violet rays which affect emotions might, an official report to congress suggested, disturb negotiations between individual leaders which might involve nations in war—that's the reasoning, anyhow.

Some may think it far-fetched. Shakespeare did when he said: "The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars, but in ourselves." Poets are frequently right but not, perhaps, immune to the violence of the violet ray. (Witness the Haitian poet who shot the publisher.)

At any rate, the Smithsonian listed considerable technical data showing that sun spot activity frequently had preceded wars.

Some scientists say sun spots may have good effects, too— resulting in heavier foliage, better crops, more rains—as well as their evil tendencies to disturb interpersonal relations, not to mention radio communications.

However, there is little we can do about it, for as far as we know the sun is like a leopard—it can't (or won't) change its spots.

One 'Free' Book Is Not Wasted

If you are one of the lucky farmers who wrote your congressman promptly, asking for a copy of the Department of Agriculture 1948 Year Book, you have a treat in store for you. The first copies already have come from the government printer but it will be some time before the bulk of the printing is ready for delivery.

This year's topic is a live one: GRASS.

It deals with the general subject of grassland agriculture and there is something in it for virtually every farmer and, if there were enough books to go around, could be utilized by everybody who raises a lawn, not to mention people who run airports or playgrounds, or any other enclosure of greensward.

There is a growing interest in this subject. One member of the department of agriculture called it "a big swing to grass" on the part of farmers over most of the country. Not just as feed but for many purposes and functions. One farmer near here, for instance, said to a friend of mine recently that he had quit growing corn for silage. He uses grass entirely.

In case you have forgotten, you have a chance to get a Department of Agriculture Year Book because of a law passed in Abraham Lincoln's time. Congress every year appropriates a sum of money; the department prepares the book, (under the incumbent editorship of Alfred Stefferud) the government printing office prints, binds and delivers 241,000 copies to members of congress. They pass them around as far as they go. That's the law.

This volume is probably one of the few "free" books which is not wasted for it goes almost exclusively to people who want it and use it—in this order—(1) farmers, (2) state agricultural colleges, (3) other colleges for G.I. courses, (4) some high schools.

Later on I shall give you an idea of the contents of the current volume which deals comprehensively with the subject of grass (including legumes and associated plants) beginning with the history from colonial days, the place of grass in building soil and feeding livestock, specific information applying to 10 sections of the United States and pictures and descriptions of a 100 different grasses and legumes.

Guard Your Liberty— Know Dates at Least

It's almost impossible to believe that any American would not know the meaning of the approaching V-J day. But will Americans, 172 years from now, remember that September 1 marked the official end of the bloodiest war in history!

Perhaps this sounds absurd to you. It wouldn't if you had read the results of one of a series of polls taken by the Washington Post. Just before July 4, the Post interviewers asked a number of individuals: "Fourth of July is almost here. Can you tell me why we celebrate it?"

Eighty-five per cent of all persons asked had the right answer.

Twelve per cent had no idea why the Fourth is a holiday, and 3 percent thought it was the anniversary of Armistice day, the end of the Civil war, emancipation of the Negroes or some other event. One of those who had no idea at all on the subject was credited with a college education.

Asked what the day meant to them, 39 per cent said, in various ways, that it meant national freedom; to 18 per cent it spelled personal freedom and liberty in general; 11 per cent said it didn't mean nothin' nohow but a holiday.

How many of us who admit that liberty—freedom—is our inherent right, know what freedom is? Few, unless they have lived in a country where one practices that quick, apprehensive look to right and left, before he dares speak a word of criticism or comment. It's a depression gesture. I've seen it and shuddered.

I have quoted W. E. Woodward before. In his "New American History," he says:

> "Liberty implies responsibility and the vast majority of mankind has always hated responsibility worse than death. So in all ages, men have run around, holding it out before them as one holds a golden vessel, offering it to anyone who possesses enough vulgar enterprise to take it away from them."

This "vulgar enterprise" is afoot today, snatching liberty, right and left and tossing it into a totalitarian limbo of the things mankind really loves—loves but does not always cherish except in memory.

One might paraphrase an ancient proverb: "A fool and his liberty are soon parted." Folly is not incurable. It can be exchanged for wisdom. Perhaps some of the "realists" who scorn such abstract subjects as political science and history would do well to encourage study of our liberty, how we came by it and why it is worth keeping.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Before you attempt to peel a raw tomato, massage it lightly with the dull edge of a knife. The peel will come loose much more easily.

Ordinary starch will often put a whitish cast on black and dark-colored clothes, unless you do something about it. Put a small amount of leftover coffee—the brew, not the grounds—into the starch.

When the stove begins to look dull, but still doesn't quite need new polish, you can brighten it up by rubbing it occasionally with waxed paper.

To prolong the life of a broom, dip it in hot soapy water or hot salt water about once a week; and always hang the broom up or stand it on its handle but never on its head.

Scissors are not considered a kitchen utensil, but are handy to keep in the kitchen to cut up lettuce and celery, trim fat from meat, and dice fruits and other vegetables.

If the wash water is hot, slip each glass slowly into it edgewise. Putting it in bottom first or top first may crack it.

Brown shoes can be dyed black temporarily if you just polish them twice with a good grade of black polish.

If you use rubber gloves when you scrub floors, put little strips of adhesive tape inside the fingers as protection against nails in the floor. Tiny holes in rubber gloves can often be mended with nail polish.

Soot can be prevented from coming through a window screen by covering the outside of the screen with cheesecloth. It'll catch the soot and can be removed for easy washing whenever necessary.

When stewed fruit begins to turn sour, reclaim it by adding a pinch of baking soda and boiling the fruit over again for a few minutes.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: The linoleum in our kitchen has risen up in a certain spot. It is inlaid linoleum over a felt base over plywood. Do you think if we bored a small hole in the linoleum and poured some kind of cement in, it would hold? What kind of cement would you recommend for this job?

ANSWER: Try this method for flattening the bulge: Cut a slit in the bulge, following a line of the pattern so that it will not show. Then press linoleum cement under each side of the slit, working it well underneath with a spatula, or some similar tool. Wipe off surface smears promptly. If you cannot get linoleum cement, use roofing cement. Smears of roofing cement should be promptly wiped off with turpentine. Then place weights on top until the cement has dried hard.

QUESTION: My walls are covered with a very poor quality of wallboard, which bulges here and there. It is covered with paper; but now shows a few cracks, which developed after the furnace was started. What is the best thing to do with the walls? The expense is an item; I'll have to have someone do all the work.

ANSWER: For a good job it would be better to take off the board and replace it with one of better quality, properly put up according to the manufacturer's instructions; or else nail up new boards over the old ones. In the meantime, you might consider nailing down the bulges as well as you can, and then covering the joints with strips of decorative wood moulding, such as half-round.

"Dry Milk Means Steadier Markets"
Land O'Lakes

"It was a break for thousands of dairy farmers when Land O'Lakes started making dried milk on a big scale," says Urban Oehrlein, manager-operator of the St. Michael (Minn.) Cooperative Creamery. "As a result, farmers have good outlets not only for butter—for buttermilk and skim milk, as well, For our farmers and our co-op creameries in Land O' Lakes this means steadier markets. It helps Land O'Lakes pay the highest average prices. Farmers get fair treatment through Land O'Lakes."

Building Soil While Crop Yields Are High Called Key To Long-Range Farm Prosperity

Bumper crop yields and good soil management go hand in hand.

CHICAGO—Waiting for crop yields to drop before building your soil is like calling the fire department after your house has burned down, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out in a statement issued here.

"The time to build up your soil is when crop yields are high," the statement declares. "That gives you immediate as well as long-range benefits. It increases your profit margin at current farm price levels, even though they have slumped from the postwar peak. It will give you a good living when the present record-breaking demand for food decreases and prices are lower.

"Production costs such as seed, plowing and cultivation are about the same whether your yields are high or low. Thus it costs twice as much per unit to produce a 50-bushel crop as it does a 100-buschel crop. That can spell the difference between red or black ink in either good or bad times. Which yield you get depends largely on your soil management.

"Good soil management means more than putting fertilizer into the ground. It means replacing organic matter burned out by too many crops of corn and grain and too few crops of deep-rooted legumes. It means rebuilding broken-down soil structure and improving tilth and workability. It means increasing the soil's capacity to absorb rain and deliver moisture to your crops. It means using conservation methods that will keep the soil from washing away once you have built it up.

"Under the head of soil building steps come deep-rooted legumes in the rotation, the return of manure and crop residues to the soil and the use of commercial fertilizer carrying phosphate and potash. These measures wil build organic matter, repair damaged soil structure and make your soil a better 'drinking fountain' for crops. Soil 'holding' operations include contour cultivation, strip cropping, terracing and, where necessary, building dams."

He has looked through the window at Karlstad for the last time but many of his accomplishments will live on.

Milk And Cream Checks Pay LOCAL Bills

Let's keep our community cash at home! Our nearby dairy farmers, trade with local suppliers and equipment dealers, do business with local banks, and spend their BUTTER income right here in town. A powerful OLEO lobby wants to divert that locally-spent income into the pockets of a small gronp of manufacturers. This they hope to do through the repeal of Federal restrictions on the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine colored yellow in imitation of butter. The interdependence of our town and its surrounding dairy farmers is in jeopardy. Be a good neighbor! Write your Senators to keep the federal oleo laws on the books!

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Congress Fights Truman Proposals; High Crop Goals Set, Wheat Cut; Atomic Tests Assure New Power

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CONGRESS:

Feudin' and Fightin'

Bitter recriminations resounded as the fight between President Truman and the GOP-controlled congress moved into a new round with convening of the extra session of the 80th congress.

In a dynamite-laden atmosphere, the President appeared before a joint session of the congress which he had labeled "one of the worst in history" to demand a sweeping anti-inflation economic program. The reception for both the President and his program was cool as Republicans launched their wrecking-crew tactics.

Defiant GOP leaders charged Mr. Truman with playing politics and prepared to play politics of their own. The net result, it appeared, would be a short special session.

Initial step in the GOP's program of obstruction was a decision that the extra session should consider only those recommendations made by Mr. Truman which could "pass a test." This test, established by the majority conference, set the qualifications for congressional action as follows:

Proposed legislation must be emergency in character.

It must contain a problem of national importance.

It must be a program which can be processed properly within the time available to an emergency session.

This available time for processing would be no longer than a period of congress which would not "interfere with the proper conduct" of the autumn campaigns.

No appropriation bills were to be considered, nor would any consideration be given to confirmation of nominations which might be sent to the senate by the President.

Over all hung the threat of a Dixie Democrats' filibuster against the anti-poll tax bill, which would widen the rift between Mr. Truman and the southern wing of his party.

There were no surprises in the President's recommended legislative package. He proposed a reimposition of the excess profits tax, limited restoration of price controls, even more limited wage controls and enactment of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill.

WHEAT:

Goal Cut

As clogged elevators and enforced embargoes once again mark the nation's harvest of another bumper wheat crop, the department of agriculture recommends a cut of 8 per cent in wheat acreage in its preliminary recommendations for the 1949 crop year.

Although continued high production of other major grain commodities is recommended, a slight decrease is suggested for wheat acreage, which has increased sharply in recent years in response to war and relief needs.

Looking forward in a move to conserve the country's soil resources, the department points out that "a better balance between soil-conserving and soil-depleting crops will actually assure higher productivity over a longer period of years."

Farmers also are urged to provide for sufficient summer fallow and, in marginal areas, to plant grass seed on land which is not suitable for sustained production of crops.

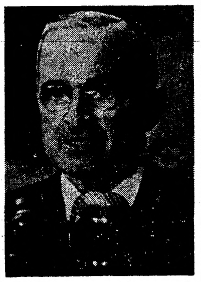
Also considered in arriving at the wheat goal were this year's increased carry-over, prospects that the 1948 crop will be second largest in history and possibility of smaller demand because of improved crops in importing countries.

The department recommended wheat plantings for 1949 of 71.5 million acres which, with an average yield of 15 bushels an acre, would mean production of nearly 1.1 billion bushels. July estimate of 1948 wheat production was 1,241,751,000 bushels.

In setting another farm goal, the department recommended a beef cattle breeding herd of 15.5 million cows next January 1, a decrease of about 500,000 head. Better management, improved feeding practices and thorough culling, it was suggested, will "put the cattle industry in better position to supply the meat requirements of the increased population."

The recommendations are submitted to state agricultural councils for consideration. State goals and final national goals are determined on the basis of state review and recommendations.

Hands in Pockets



Face to face with the congress he had labeled "worst, save one," in history, President Truman was greeted by one of the coolest congressional receptions ever accorded a chief executive when he appeared before the special session. Only polite applause came occasionally from the galleries and from administration followers; Republicans kept their hands in their pockets.

A-BOMBS:

New Force

The veil of secrecy which has shrouded most of the post-war atomic energy experiments was lifted, a tiny bit at least, for the American public in the fourth semi-annual report of the atomic energy commission and an acompanying statement by President Truman.

Justifying the secrecy, the President contended that until controls are established on the international level to prevent use of atomic energy for military purposes "we cannot, as a nation, afford to disclose these secrets which make this new force the most deadly form of military weapon." With that statement, the American people, anxiously eyeing war clouds on the horizon, are inclined to agree.

Some measure of reassurance was contained in both reports, stressing the fact that the nation has gained new power in atomic weapons. Both disclosed that the secret tests of new type bombs at the proving grounds on Eniwetok island early this year were highly successful.

The commission's report, the fourth semi-annual summary to congress as provided by law, indicated there were three bombs used at Eniwetok in the spring project known as "Operation Sandstone." Principal study was "on the generation of nuclear explosion itself" rather than "on the effects of the nuclear explosion," as was the case in the earlier Bikini tests.

The report stressed developments of atomic energy research in medicine, agriculture, metallurgy, other sciences and industry. Radioactive materials have been given 229 institutions and commercial agencies for experimentation.

LIVING COSTS:

Hit Peak

They changed the name—from cost of living index to consumers price index—but they still can't change the trend—upward and ever upward.

In fact, the index struck an all-time high on June 15, with food prices reaching record-shattered levels, the bureau of labor statistics reports.

The index, which represents retail prices of goods and services bought by moderate income families in large cities, registered 171.7 per cent of the 1935-39 average.

Further increases are inevitable, too, for wholesale prices hit an all-time high during the week ended July 17 and it takes about a month for their impact to be recorded in retail prices.

The new consumers price index is 9.3 per cent higher than a year ago; 28.8 per cent above June, 1946, when price controls generally were abandoned, and 74.1 per cent above the August, 1939, level. On V-J Day in 1945 the same index was 129.3 per cent of the 1935-39 average.

PRECARIOUS PERCH

Americans Seek Economic Security

Increasingly aware of the need for economic security for themselves and their families, Americans will expend approximately 15 billion dollars for that purpose in 1948, the Research Council for Economic Security estimates.

The estimate covers payments made under private or government organized plans to meet insecurity arising from death, old age, accident, sickness, disability, unemployment and other conditions.

Northeastern, middlewestern, and Pacific coast states have the largest measure of protection, both in total amounts and in per capita payments, the study discloses.

Women Busy Sewing

Two billion yards of fabrics went over store counters last year for home sewing. Girls and women sew for themselves for four reasons: (1) As a hedge against ready-to-wear quality. (2) They don't like to "see themselves coming" want individuality. (3) They live in communities where clothing choice is limited. (4) They find home sewing artistic and creative. Sewing classes the country over are crowded to capacity. In addition to classes held in hundreds of stores, there are 1,000 sewing centers run by sewing machine companies. It is estimated that a million women, from teen-agers to grandmothers, took sewing-class lessons in 1947.

"Rescuing" Wild Life Babies

Every summer thousands of young birds and animals apparently lost from their parents are illegally picked up by thoughtless, well meaning people who believe they are doing a kindness. Almost always, the Iowa state conservation commission points out, the mother is nearby, unable to protect her young from her greatest fear—man. If the young are left alone the mother and the youngsters soon get together. In cases where the mother is killed by accident, human care for the young is justifiable and humane.

Dehydrating Alfalfa

When alfalfa is dehydrated it usually is cut with a field chopper which blows it into a large wagon. As soon as the wagon is filled it is hauled to the dehydrating plant. The ideal timing is to get it into the dehydrator in less than two hours—then little wilting (or enzyme action) has taken place. Actual process of dehydrating takes only a few minutes.

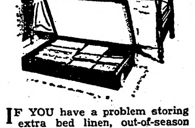
How Safe are Planes?

Safety in private planes varies with a number of conditions, just as it does with any other form of transportation. The pilot, the condition of the plane, the weather, are all factors. In general, underwriters of air insurance will figure insurance at about twice to three times the cost of the same kind of insurance for a car which is driven in the country.

Providing for Bob White

When winter comes the bob white joins his friends and relatives in a covey for mutual protection from the elements. They must have food and cover to survive the winter. Weed seeds are their chief winter diet and a hedge, thicket or overgrown fence row will provide them a home.

Storage Chest Solves Extra Space Problem



IF YOU have a problem storing extra bed linen, out-of-season clothing, or just about one hundred other articles everyone collects and doesn't know where to put, this under-the-bed storage chest should be of interest to you. While the pattern offered suggests building a chest approximately 30" wide, 42" long by 6" deep, it can be built to any length required.

One of the big features of this chest, beside ample storage facilities, is its utilization of unused space. Being suspended between large wooden wheels the chest can be rolled under the bed, even over rugs with very little effort. Its capacity is truly amazing. Being dustproof, it provides an excellent place to store your finest things.

Anyone can build the chest by following the full size pattern now available. It tells what materials are needed, shows location of bolt and screw holes and provides the simplest method of building. All the materials needed are now available at lumber yards everywhere.

If you live in an apartment and hesitate to make this chest for fear of disturbing the neighbors, the chest can be built without driving a nail. A glue is now available that binds two pieces of wood together so thoroughly that the wood will break before the joint can be loosened.

A tip to those who plan on attending a wedding real soon—this chest makes an ideal wedding gift for the lucky bride and groom. Send 25c for Pattern No. 37 to Easi-Bild Pattern Company, Dept. W., Pleasantville, New York.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Our gas refrigerator has taken on a yellowish color. How can I restore it to its former whiteness?

ANSWER: Try washing the surface with mild soap and warm water. Rinse with a solution of javelle water, using about three teaspoonsful in a quart of water, and wipe dry.

QUESTION: What should I do about curled shingles on my house?

ANSWER: Sometimes a curled shingle can be split in two or three pieces and then well nailed. If only a few of your shingles are curled, replace them with shingles of a better quality.

Small Woodlots Hold Key To Future Timber Supply

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—I have just had an interesting conversation with R. E. McArdle of the forest service of the department of agriculture, and I have discovered that I'm one of the people that the United States of America has to look to for its future lumber supply.

My father took up some of the last of the government forest land that was available in the Southwest. That little plot, along with the other privately-owned timberland straggling over the map of the U. S., makes up three-quarters of all the timber there is in the country. Only one-fourth of our forests are public property.

And three-fourths of this three-fourths is composed of small wood lots which average 60 to 70 acres. Furthermore much of it is not part of a farm being worked by an experienced farmer. A great deal is owned by people who don't live on the wood lot or near it (like me), and many of whom (also like me) wouldn't be able to tell a toothpick from a telephone pole if it weren't for their size.

Baukhage

Worse still, many farmers owning woodlots with valuable stands of timber on them don't know how to get their money's worth from that land or how to keep the wooded acres contributing to their livelihood as the rest of their farmland does. In other words, growing timber in this country has become to a large extent a side issue.

I am glad to report, after telling you all this bad news, that both the government and the lumber industry are trying to do something about this situation for the general, as well as for the individual, good.

For example, in 1937, the Crossett Lumber company gave the government 1,680 acres of typical second growth stands in southeastern Arkansas. I can't go into the program of experimental work that has been done there, but there is one item that affects our story.

R. R. Reynolds of the forestry service went to work on 40 acres of this area. He did the things any farmer can learn to do to a similar woodlot.

Last year Reynolds reported eight annual cuts which averaged a marketable value of more than $580 a year, and he had as much volume as when he started!

Of course, everybody hasn't Reynolds' know-how, but the government is helping to spread that know-how through its representatives or through state organizations. So is private enterprise.

Florida Teaches Youth Forestry Fundamentals

Thirteen years ago, Florida for example, began a forestry training camp for her Future Farmers of America members. On August 1 of this year, some 200 members of the FFA attended a two week camp at Camp O'Leno, about 60 miles west of Jacksonville, where they were taught, in the forest, the fundamentals of good forest practices.

The first week was for beginners who had had no previous forestry background; the second week was for those who had attended a previous camp.

During the first period they were taught fundamentals of gum farming—how to secure naval stores such as turpentine and rosin from slash and long-leaf pines; how to identify the commercially valuable trees and their use; how to farm forests as they farm cotton and other crops; how to protect their woodlots from fire; how to thin their stands of trees by cutting out the crooked, diseased, and other trees to allow the healthy ones room for more rapid growth; how to make seed beds grow tree seedlings, and how to transplant them on their woodlots.

In the second week, the lads were put through more training in advanced principles with emphasis on actual work in the forest. They fought a fire to learn the correct procedure.

They marked trees in a plot, estimated the board footage in a standing tree, cut it down, sawed it into lumber, and measured the lumber as a check against their previous estimates. They were taught how to chip trees in gum farming and how to market the gum. They were even put through a law enforcement course which stressed fighting the incendiarist in the woods. They were shown how to detect clues for purposely set fires.

Health and recreation are not neglected in these camps, and at the end of the two week period the boys go home enthusiastic, ready to practice on their own woodlands. They take the message to their parents, of course, and make a report to the organizations to which they belong. Briefly they have gained a fundamental knowledge of the value of trees and how they can be grown for profit.

During the time Florida has run this camp, they have averaged 100 boys a year which means some 1,300 have been indoctrinated in the fundamentals of forestry. Today many of these graduates are leading citizens of their communities and many are growing trees for profit.

Program Extends To Other States

Nor is Florida the only state taking an interest in this new thinking regarding trees and youth. Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, and Virginia staged similar camps this year. FFA or 4-H club members were the lucky youngsters, depending on which group the state forestry agency is co-operating with at the time.

The purpose, of course, is not to turn out foresters. That would be impossible in two weeks. But camps can build up an effective interest in growing a cash crop by growing trees.

This year more than 600 youths from the seven states attended these camps, with all expenses paid by the forest industries.

This is where private industry has stepped into the picture. On the modern theory that our future timber supply must come from what we grow, not as in the past from what we found on the land, the Southern Pulpwood association, composed of southern pulp and paper industry members, with the cooperation of the Southern Pine association, pioneered in financing these and similar camps.

The sum total of this whole project adds up to this: Industry has joined forces with state agencies to interest youth in becoming successful Tree Farmers of America, and to turn to account what has been up to recently a wasteful sideline on the farms—a sideline which must supply an important part of America's current and future vital lumber needs.

Florida teaches the fundamentals of good forestry to FFA youth at annual summer camps. Trammel Green, nurseryman for the Florida forest service, is shown here instructing two boys in preparation of a seed bed. Here they are spreading pine straw over the freshly planted seed as a protective measure.

Sisters Meet For First Time

A London airport was the scene of the meeting of two sisters who had never seen each other before, although both were over thirty years old. When Miss June Morgan, 31, stepped down from the plane arriving from the United States she was greeted by her sister Violet, 34, now Mrs. Clifford Evans of Reading, England, who had been left in Great Britain as a child when her parents went to America, where June was born three years later. Each sister had photographs of the other and they had no difficulty in recognizing each other at the crowded airport.

AROUND THE HOUSE

If your scouring powder comes in cardboard containers which go to pieces before the powder is used up, make your own permanent container by using an empty mayonnaise jar in the top of which you have punched holes. To keep this glass "powder shaker" from slipping out of your wet soapy hands, put some strips of adhesive tape around the sides of the jar.

To avoid steaming up the bathroom when you draw your bath, run cold water first and then add hot water to it until you get the desired mixture. After a shower, turn on the cold water for a few minutes to clear up the steam.

Most common types of shoe polish can be removed with cleaning fluid. Or, on washable whites, let the polish dry and then brush most of it off. After that, wet it and let it dry again so you can brush it again.

In an emergency, when you haven't time to change from your best shoes to your house ones for some last-minute cooking or dish washing, protect the shoes by slipping paper bags over your feet and secure them at the ankles with rubber bands.

When raisins get stale and hard, they can be freshened and used if you put them in a strainer and set the strainer with a cover on it over a pot of boiling water for about 15 minutes.

To keep sandwiches fresh, wrap them in waxed paper; but before you fold the paper over, run a warm iron along the double edges. The wax will melt and the edges will fuse.

When you empty a hot-water bottle, blow air into it and then screw the stopper in.

The gummy residue left by adhesive tape on your skin or on any other surface is easily removed with nail polish remover or cleaning fluid.

Lightning Warning to Farmers

Lightning tends to strike the highest point in the vicinity. This may be a barn, tree, or a man workng in the field. A building adequately equipped with lightning rods affords the best protection. If you are working in a field and do not have time to seek the protection of a rodded building, lie down in a low spot in the field, away from wire fences, trees, livestock and machinery. Avoid seeking shelter under trees, particularly lone trees or small groves. Wire fences and machinery should also be avoided during electrical storms because they attract lightning.

For Better Canning Job

For best flavor and higher vitamin content, can red ripe firm tomatoes. Blanch them, peel and pack into jars. Process in a water-bath canner. Can berries in berry juice with the addition of a small amount of sugar. Berries canned by this method will have a nicer color and flavor. Peel table ripe peaches by blanching in hot water, then cool in cold water. Firmer peaches may be peeled by dipping in a lye solution. To prevent discoloration of frozen peaches, add ascorbic acid and citric acid to the sugar or sugar syrup.

Contour Planting

Contour planting is simply planting on the level. Each row, being at a right angle to the natural direction of flow, acts as a miniature dam to hold back water and allow it, or a large portion of it, to soak into the soil. However, rows may be slightly off the exact contour, without interfering with their efficiency; in fact, in regions of heavy rainfall there is an advantage in having them drain to one side of the garden or to a prepared outlet.

Netherlands Trade

Despite manifold difficulties, Holland's trade with Germany increased slightly in the second half of 1947, according to the first annual report published by the Netherland Trust Company for Trade with Foreign Countries. The company was floated in January 1947, in agreement with the Netherlands Government and the Allied occupation authorities in Germany for the purpose of promoting Netherlands trade with Germany and other countries.

Location of Apiaries

Bees will fly an average distance of one and one-half to two miles in search of nectar and pollen, and much farther if necessary. It is seldom practical, therefore, to locate apiaries closer than a mile apart, unless the nectar production warrants. The number of colonies in any particular region will also influence the number that should be kept in each apiary.

Farm Labor Camps

A total of 109 farm labor camps, used in housing migratory agricultural workers under the recently concluded farm labor program, have been sold by the department of agriculture. Most of these camps will continue to be used as housing for farm workers, and will continue in operation on the same sites, which were leased by the government when the camps were built.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Moscow Talks Provide Peace Hope; Congress Eyes Inflation, Housing; Red Spy Scare Startles Country

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MOSCOW:
Conference

Practically all that anyone knew during the initial stages of the Moscow conference between Josef Stalin and the ambassadors of three western nations was that there was a conference.

The opacity of a thick censorship ban overlaid any details of what was happening.

Nevertheless, the impression was that the talks fathered by the desperation inherent in the Berlin crisis, might be the first step in easing off the strain between Russia and the western powers.

Some information that slipped through the secrecy wall indicated that both sides might be willing to make some concessions in order to further negotiations between Russia and the U. S., Great Britain and France.

The talks with Stalin and Molotov were reported to have produced at least one new suggestion—that prior to another Big Four conference there should be a meeting of the U. S., Russian, British and French deputy foreign ministers.

Such a conference would, theoretically, be accompanied by a gradual relaxation of the restrictions which the Soviets have clamped on the western areas of Berlin and which brought the East-West relations to their present boiling point.

Although it might be the height of optimism, Communist Russia being what it is, there was some faint hope that such a piecemeal lifting of the Berlin blockade might bring about a provisional meeting of minds on the subject of German currency and other irritating issues.

At the worst, such a discussion at least would tend to act as a brake against a drift to war and provide a breathing space for talks with Moscow on more basic controversies.

There was, however, still another interpretation of the discussions between Stalin and the three western ambassadors: Russia, having carried its Berlin blockade virtually to the ultimate point short of war, might be thinking that it had brought the western powers to a position where they would have to accede to Soviet demands if they wished to avoid conflict.

CONGRESS:
Unwilling

Probably the only accomplishment of the special summer session of congress called by President Truman was to provide both parties with a bigger and better supply of political ammunition for the election campaign.

Democrats would be able to say that the GOP congress simply sat back on its haunches and did nothing about the pressing problems of inflation, housing and other national issues.

Republicans could counter with the assertion that, within the bounds of their political beliefs and judgment of what is best for the nation, they did all they could under the circumstances. To that they probably would add the stock argument that the whole thing is the fault of the 16-year Democratic regime and that the ultimate solution must lie in the election of a Republican administration this November.

One result of the special session that might be classed as favorable was that it served to sharpen the rough edges of the wide cleavage between the two parties over domestic problems and give the voters a more clear-cut, definitive idea of what they will be deciding on November 2.

Despite President Truman's laborious diatribes against congress and his repeated warnings that controls alone will curb the now dangerous inflation, in the final analysis it remained foolish to believe that the GOP congress ever would take the action he recommended. Republicans simply do not approve of that method of handling the nation's economy.

Republican congressmen agreed only to string along with legislation serving to reimpose consumer credit controls, with some limitation on bank credits, and to speed action on a watered-down housing program which does little except ease credit terms for home builders.

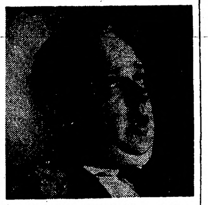
The anti-poll tax measure, blocked for a week by a droning filibuster by southern Democrats, finally withered and blew away in dust.

TAXATION:
125 Billion

By the end of this year individual taxpayers in the U. S. will have paid nearly 125 billion dollars in direct personal taxes, according to a survey entitled "Domestic Consumer Markets" prepared by the National Industrial Conference board.

Last year, the report says, Americans paid more in personal taxes than they spent for new homes, cars, furniture and medical care.

'Then There Was . . .'



Whittaker Chambers, a senior editor of Time magazine and an admitted former member of the Communist party, got a load off his chest when he told the house un-American activities committee the names of a few more higher echelon government officials who had participated in the notorious Washington spy ring of a decade ago. His testimony included the names of Alger Hiss, former state department official; Nathan Witt, former attorney for NLRB, and Lee Pressman, former CIO general counsel.

ESPIONAGE:
Dragon Seed

The dragon seeds of international espionage sown during the war suddenly had begun to bloom with a vengeance and the nation's capital seemed to be overgrown with spies and rumors of spies.

First stone was cast by Miss Elizabeth Bentley, self-confessed courier for Soviet agents, who revealed that much of her information had come from sources in official government positions.

She showed no hesitancy in naming names, among which were those of Nathan G. Silvermaster, board of economic warfare and war assets administration official; William W. Remington, former commerce department official, and Alger Hiss, former state department official active in the establishment of the United Nations.

There was no visible proof that any of the persons she implicated ever had furnished information to the Soviet espionage ring, although some had Communistic backgrounds. As a matter of fact, the FBI reported that it had spent more than three million dollars in an investigation of the same matter months prior to the current excitement. The G-men finally gave it up because of lack of documentary proof.

But congressional investigations were under way in both the senate and house. Testimony included the usual flamboyant accusations and recriminations but failed to produce any concrete evidence.

Rep. Karl Mundt (Rep., S. D.), chairman of the house un-American activities committee, added to the national impact of the affair by asserting that there is "good reason to believe a Communist spy ring is operating in Washington right now."

His committee was investigating, he said, although the public hearings so far had dealt only with the testimony that a Red espionage system was at work in the U. S. during the war.

COTTON:
Mechanized

Last of the great American farm commodities to remain essentially a man-mule crop, cotton finally is becoming mechanized, thus eliminating the necessity of maintaining vast armies of laborers to meet the two peak labor periods of the crop cycle.

Mechanization is one of the major steps in the effort of cotton people from Virginia to California to achieve lower production costs. To the 12½ million people in 18 states who derive all or a substantial part of their income from cotton it is of paramount importance that they keep their crop competitive cost-wise.

The answer lies, to a great extent, in mechanization. Thinning and weeding equipment and harvesting machines are revamping the farm picture in the South.

The mechanical cotton picker is capable of performing the work of 40 to 50 human pickers, varying with weather conditions, land surface, and other factors.

Typical result of mechanization was the experience of a Mississippi farmer who used a flame cultivator to control weeds at a cost of 50 cents an acre at the same time human choppers were costing $5.

Of course, complete mechanization of cotton will not materialize overnight. National Cotton council, representing the entire industry, reports that in 1947 less than 3 per cent of the crop could be classed as entirely mechanized. A considerable portion of the remaining crop, however, was in various stages of mechanization.

Onions are probably the most dangerous vegetable to slice thin because they have a way of slipping out of the knife's way and leaving your fingers there to take the rap. Avoid this by setting the onion on a flat metal grater while you slice it. The grater won't allow the onion to slip out from under at the crucial moment.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Please tell me how to remove old paint from "white limed oak" finish on a dining set.

ANSWER: Soften the old paint with paint remover, then take it off with a hand scraper and steel wool. Carefully avoid scratching or gouging the wood. Follow by cleaning off every trace of remover with benzine or turpentine. If the color of the wood is what you wish, you can refinish with quick-drying varnish or in some other way.

QUESTION: We have to put a new floor down in our basement. Which is better, plank or concrete?

ANSWER: Do not use boards because they will rot in time. Have a good waterproof, concrete floor laid by a mason contractor.

An American's Faith

This year at the commencement exercises of Harding College a notable address was delivered. It was no ordinary speech. The burden of its message was so signficant, and the appeal so earnest, that I wish the audience had been many times larger. I am therefore taking this method of passing to you a portion of this solid and thoughtful address. It was made by Mr. Lamar Fleming, Jr., of Houston, Texas.

"This historic responsibility is new to us. . . . But those who view accomplishments in the atomic laboratories and the development of other terrible means of destruction must recognize that no one on earth longer has the power to decide whether he will live alone. That power of decision has passed to those who are evil enough to . . . use terrible new weapons for their evil designs—unless mankind combines to prevent them from so doing.

Our Call from Destiny

"If we accept that, being sons of God, we are brothers to all Mankind, and that we are the only nation strong enough to lead Mankind to combine for suppression of violence and recovery of Peace, we cannot reject the role to which our Destiny calls us. We will cherish the memory of more placid days, when this responsibility was not upon us, but we cannot reject our Destiny.

"We must enter this role in humility, conscious of our shortcomings and determined to overcome them to the best of our ability. We must search our souls. We must do more than conquer the resistance to truth which springs from our animal instincts. We must chastise all who seek to inflame and prey upon our group grievances, greeds, and hatreds. We must remind ourselves constantly that our duty of human brotherhood is no less to distant peoples . . . than to our neighbors in our home towns.

Men of Good Will

"We must realize that peace and well-being will not return to them nor remain with us unless we achieve the ability to work together in a brotherly and mutually helpful company, each placing the common good above the greeds and ambitions of any person, group, or nation. We must include . . . peoples temporarily prevented from cooperation toward the common good and must pray for the day when their chains will be removed and they will be free to join our company.

"Above all, we must require of this great undertaking that it function by the standards of millions of individual consciences, which are the communion of sons and daughters with their Spiritual Father—not by group, party, or national ethics, in which conscience gives way to animal instincts, fears, and passions of the herd, and responsibility is spread so thin that no one feels it as his own. This calls for a profound spiritual revival—in us, and in all men and women of good will.

Well of Goodness

". . . I have faith that all men and women everywhere have something in common between them, that is fundamentally good, and that time and great effort and patience will restore the mutual flow of this goodness and understanding between them, not merely in your lifetime but also in mine. . . . I have great faith that the well of goodness in the Americans of your generation will be full enough to start the mutual flow."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Heavy Farm Debt Retirement Near End; Latin America Hikes Famine Aid; Russ Want Atom Veto

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

PERCENTAGE CHANGE IN AVERAGE VALUE PER ACRE OF FARM REAL ESTATE FROM 1935-39 AVERAGE TO MARCH 1946

FARM DEBT:
Decline Slows

Smaller declines in mortgage reduction within the last year and an increase in the number of states showing larger indebtedness suggest that the period of heavy retirement of farm debt since 1923 may be ended, the department of agriculture reported.

Despite signs of increasing indebtedness, however, the record for the war years shows an overall cut of 1½ billion dollars in debt in sharp contrast to the 43 per cent rise during the 1915-19 period. As of the first of this year, total indebtedness stood at 5 billion dollars, half of the 1923 figure of 10½ billion.

Slowing of debt reduction was reflected in the 100 per cent drop in repayments last year in comparison with 1944. At the same time, 20 states showed increases in indebtedness in contrast to 8 the preceding year. Higher acreage values as of March, 1945, over the 1935-39 period ranged from 115 per cent for Tennessee to 26 per cent for Massachusetts.

FAMINE AID:
South America Helps

Winding up a 15,000-mile food survey in South America, former President Herbert Hoover reported that as a result of increasing their exports and cutting down on their own imports, our good neighbors will increase the available supply of foodstuffs for a hungry world by 800,000 tons.

In reporting on his South American swing as chairman of President Truman's famine committee, Hoover warmly praised the relief efforts of Juan Peron's Argentine government. Despite a partial crop failure, Argentina will supply 90 per cent of South American grain shipments during the next four months, with exports expected to rise to 750,000 tons monthly following emergency measures.

As aids to overseas relief, Colombia, Venezuela, Chile, Peru and Uruguay agreed to slash their cereal and fats imports to a minimum during the next few critical months, Hoover said. Mexico, Ecuador, Chile, Peru and Uruguay will hike their shipments of beans, rice, meat, fats and sugar. In all, the Latin Americans agreed to increase exports approximately 450,000 tons and decrease their own imports 380,000.

UNRRA Aid

In asking congress to appropriate the remaining 465 million dollars of the 2¾ billions it authorized for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation administration, President Truman disclosed that the U. S. accounted for 71.7 per cent of the tonnage already distributed by the UNRRA and 65.8 per cent of its value.

Pointing out the need for additional relief, Mr. Truman declared that many of the countries receiving UNRRA aid have only a few weeks stocks of food remaining. In some countries minimum rations may not even be met for people who have been living on the borderline of starvation.

With 7 million of 27 million people in Hunan province alone facing starvation, famine conditions are worse in China, the President said. Because of poor crops in the Hunan rice bowl, men, women and children are eating grass, roots, dry bark and even clay. The situation is further aggravated by the lack of adequate transport facilities to distribute available supplies.

RUBBER:
Boost Price

Taking cognizance of the heavy world demand for natural rubber and increased costs of postwar operations, the U. S. agreed to a 3¼ cent pound boost in the price of the commodity in negotiations with the international rubber monopoly embracing Britain, the Netherlands and France.

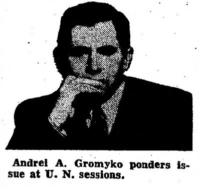
With the U. S. able to produce synthetic rubber for most of its needs at approximately 16 cents a pound from its tremendous capacity of 1,000,000 tons annually, the agreement to pay the monopoly 23½ cents a pound represented a move to maintain foreign revenue for U. S. trade. Natural rubber from far eastern sources will provide the bulk of U. S. supplies, with this country continuing production of 250,000 tons of synthetic annually. Synthetic plants with a capacity of 350,000 tons will be kept in a stand-by condition.

Under the U. S. agreement with the British, Dutch and French, the monopoly will continue to make allocations of rubber to various users. Though this country will be able to buy rubber directly from Malaya, the British will peg prices there by paying 23½ cents per pound for the commodity.

ATOM CONTROL:
Russ Proposal

Hanging on to the veto prerogative of the major powers of the United Nations, Russia's counter-proposal to the U. S. plan for control of atomic energy hit the U. S. provision requiring the surrender of the privilege in atomic supervision.

In jealously guarding its veto power even in atomic affairs, Russia continued to insist upon the means of offsetting any voting combinations against it. Reflecting Moscow's concern over such a development, the London Daily Worker stated: "There is within U. N. and its security council an Anglo-American bloc against the Soviet union. . . . With the veto power removed, the U. S. and Britain, with their satellites, would be able . . . to carry the day against the USSR."



Andrei A. Gromyko ponders issue at U. N. sessions.

Soviet Delegate Andrei A. Gromyko skirted the real issues in insisting upon retention of the veto power in an atomic control commission plan. He repeated Russian press talk by declaring that removal of the veto prerogative constituted efforts to undermine the principle of unity of the big five on all international questions.

Aside from the thorny issue of the veto, the Russian counter-proposal resembled the U. S. control plan in major respects. The Reds suggested conclusion of an international agreement to prohibit use of atomic weapons, forbid production and maintenance of such armament, and force destruction of all stocks of A-bombs.

The Russ plan would also establish two committees, one for studying the control of atomic development for peaceful use, and the other for guarding against production of atomic weapons.

Early reaction to the U. S. plan found Britain pleading its co-operation for atomic control without flatly endorsing the American proposal and China, Brazil and Mexico supporting the U. S. proposition.

LABOR:
Top Wages

Of all the workers employed in 32 major industrial classifications, those working for transportation equipment industries made the highest average weekly earnings in both January and July, 1945.

Employees in transportation equipment industries, excluding automobile manufacturing, averaged $62.61 a week in January, 1945, and $59.64 a week in July, 1945.

AGRICULTURE . . .

Prospects of poultry flock reduction in May and June to levels more nearly in keeping with available feed have been improved by culling approximately 28 million non-productive and low - producing birds in May alone, the department of agriculture said. Producers were urged early last month to cull at least 55 million non-productive and low-producing birds from their flocks in May and June in the famine program.

PALESTINE:
Hot Spot

Great Britain stood right in the middle of the fevered struggle in Palestine over large-scale Jewish immigration to the Holy Land so bitterly contested by the predominant Arab population.

Following the pacification of the Arabs by Foreign Minister Bevin's blunt rejection of the proposed immigration of 100,000 Jews to Palestine, the moderate Jewish resistance movement joined with extremist groups in a reign of terror, blowing up bridges and rail yards, firing at British troops and kidnapping officers.

The violent outbreaks of the Jewish elements were seen as pressure moves designed to bring about a modification of the British stand. Though the proposal to admit 100,000 Jews to Palestine did not meet with complete approval of Jewish leaders when first presented, they settled for it and may fight for acceptance of a similar compromise.

JEWEL THEFT:
In Indies

The theft of $3,000,000 of crown jewels and heirlooms of the royal Hesse family of Germany was topped by the stealing of $6,000,000 of gold, currency and gems by a British, Dutch and Japanese ring in the East Indies.

Special British police were called in to crack the case after a British captain and Dutchman learned of the whereabouts of the treasure from a Japanese official's Eurasian mistress and divided the loot between them.

Originally, the Jap had hauled 10 steel trunks and 5 crates of gold, currency and gems to his mistress' dwelling after V-J Day and told her to take her pick of the loot. After she had chosen jewels valued at six million dollars the Jap then turned the remainder of the cache estimated at twenty two millions to his superior.

When the woman began bragging of her sudden wealth to friends—exclaiming "I am richer than a queen (and) I am going to sleep in a golden bed—a Dutch civilian gained her confidence and learned of the loot. He tipped off a British captain, who commandeered the treasure and split it with him. Made aware of the missing fortune, special British police entered the case and seized the pair.

Meanwhile, Allied officials redoubled efforts to nail the missing Japs with the remainder of the treasure, which had been confiscated from Dutch civilians during the Nipponese occupation of the East Indies.

RED ARMY:
Tighten Discipline

Completing the swing from a "democratic" to the traditional authoritarian type of army, Russia ordered the tightening up of discipline in military ranks and the cultivation of respect and pride in the profession of arms.

First steps in the Russian program to develop a more efficient and closer knit military machine were the re-establishment of rank, cultivation of old military traditions and the reward of merit. This signalized a radical departure from the old bolshevik principle of equality of men in the service, with its attendant lack of discipline.

The latest orders issued from the Kremlin serve to still further tighten up regulations to promote a smoother working military machine. Prompt and precise execution of orders are now required; soldiers must bear difficulties without protest and be ready to shed their blood; the men must knuckle down to serious consideration of military technique, and troops must respect their superiors and observe all the rules of military etiquette, such as saluting.

CONGRESS:
Report on Reds

Two Democratic congressmen joined two Republicans in hitting at Russian politics in eastern Europe and sharply criticizing U. S. diplomacy in a report filed with the house foreign affairs committee summarizing their findings of an overseas tour last fall.

Listing their observations, Representatives Ryder (Dem., Conn.), Gordon (Dem., Ill.), Bolton (Rep., Ohio) and Mundt (Rep., Minn.) declared:

- Soviet secret police and agents have conducted a reign of terror in Poland in support of the Russian-backed provisional government.
- U. S. concessions to Russia have weakened the hand of Communists friendly to the U. S. on the all-powerful politburo ruling the Soviet.
- U. S. inability to claim credit for vast lend-lease shipments have enabled Soviet officials to accredit the supplies to Russian production and strengthen their own political position.

SUGAR:
Output Drops

The world's sugar production for 1945-46 now being marketed is estimated at 27.2 million short tons, (raw value), by the department of agriculture's office of foreign agricultural relations. This is three-quarters of a million tons less than the previous season, 3.5 million tons less than in 1943-44, and, 7.3 million tons below the 1935-39 prewar average of the department indicated in its survey.

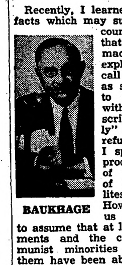
Czech Refugee Confirms Crack in Iron Curtain

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Is the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics cracking? That's an idea which is being toyed with by some wishful thinkers in Washington while others consider it one of the most dangerous playthings that ever got into the hands of unwary diplomats.

In any case, the theory is worth examining. It appears to have been encouraged by some members of the little group of highly intelligent but also highly prejudiced people who form a constantly growing segment of Washington society—the political refugees from the countries on the Soviet borders. One can, however, trust this group for certain basic facts.



BAUKHAGE

Recently, I learned one of these facts which may surprise you. Of course, you recall that Soviet diplomacy always has explained what we call its aggression as simply a desire to surround itself with what it describes as "friendly" countries. The refugees of whom I spoke are living proof that not all of the inhabitants of Russia's satellites are friendly. However, most of us have been led to assume that at least the governments and the controlling Communist minorities which support them have been able to produce a degree of mutual affection which satisfies the Kremlin. After Tito's action we wondered.

What about the frontiers between these countries and Russia?

The answer came from an anti-Communist, recently arrived from Czechoslovakia—one of the many persons who are seeping out of that and other satellite countries every day. He was asked in my presence if the frontier between his country and Russia was open, in the sense that travel was permitted under the same conditions that obtain between normally friendly nations.

The Czech laughed. He said: "The border between my country and Russia is no tighter than a dam would have to be to keep a drop of water from getting through."

I have heard the Russian frontiers of other satellite nations similarly described.

My informant also outlined other significant conditions in Czechoslovakia, first reminding us of three important facts:

1. Czechoslovakia is the most industrialized of all the satellites.

2. It is also the most democratic in the realistic sense we view democracy. In other words, the country is thoroughly indoctrinated with the kind of democratic methods we know. This is due in part, of course to the fact that so many of the men responsible for formation of the Czech republic spent many years in the United States and were made thoroughly familiar with American methods. It is also due to the fact that they had a long period of practical experience in putting these methods into effect in their own country.

3. The Czechs had a very high standard of living compared to the other satellites.

These factors, taken together, made the Czechs particularly vulnerable to a Communist coup. When it came, because of their democratic training and high standard of living, the Czechs were particularly unhappy as an aftermath of Communist methods and Russian domination. In other words, the Czechs had more to lose than any of the other countries within the Red orbit.

Greater Problems Are in Prospect

Czechoslovakia is not yet thoroughly communized. There is still a certain amount of open criticism. There have been no wholesale purges. Undoubtedly, these will come, but when they do—and herein those who believe that the Soviet position is weakening are encouraged—the prospects are that the harder the Russians crack down, the greater problem Czechoslovakia will present to her Kremlin overseers.

Before the coup that ended in the death of Masaryk took place, it was estimated that perhaps 20 per cent of the people had been indoctrinated with communism. Another 10 per cent were sympathetic, chiefly from a theoretical point of view. My Czech informant declares that it can be reliably estimated that the taste of practical communism which the people have had now has reduced that communist score to 15 per cent.

He also confirmed the recent statements about the army—though he gave no figures—made by Gen. Antonin Hasal who escaped to the American zone of Germany in the middle of July. Hasal said that 70 per cent of the enlisted men and non-commissioned officers in the Czech army was anti-Communist.

My informant put it this way: "The air force, many of whose members fought with the R. A. F., is almost entirely pro-Western. If the Reds hadn't drained the tanks of all the planes before the coup, most of them would have flown away." Many did anyway and Czech planes are turning up continually in Western controlled areas of Europe. This occurs in civil aviation too because many of the pilots are former members of the air corps.

But if the Red government cannot trust the air corps, it has even less confidence in the Czech armored force. It has been necessary to immobilize it.

But the greatest friction caused by partial communization is felt in the nation's economy. Everyone suffers, at least indirectly, because of this, but it can be seen most clearly among workers. Recent figures, which were made available to the public, indicate that there is a sharp falling-off in the man-hour productiveness. This could be attributed either to conscious sabotage or to a feeling of indifference and resentment caused by reduced pay and restrictions on the union labor movement.

Before the Russians moved in, 75 to 80 per cent of Czechoslovakia's foreign trade was with non-Communist countries. This has been considerably reduced under pressure from Russia, but even now some 60 to 70 per cent of her exports go to Western Europe.

Virtually the entire output of the great Skoda arms factory goes to Russia. The output is largely heavy artillery. Production of small arms for Russia also has been stepped up greatly.

Chance of Revolt Termed Small

Objective observers admit that there is small chance of an open revolt. That isn't the Czech method. They are great underground workers, but they haven't the enthusiasm for blood-letting that people like the Yugoslavs have. If, however, the Soviets became involved in war, undoubtedly the Czechs would join heartily with those they consider their liberators.

Those persons who predict a crack in the iron curtain base part of their argument on an attitude among Czech leaders which is said to parallel that of Tito's supporters in Yugoslavia. That is this question of nationalism. There have been recent reports from Europe that Czech Premier Gottwald, who always has been considered Moscow's right-hand-man in Czechoslovakia, is about to fall from Soviet grace for the same reason Tito fell.

Gottwald is a lifelong Communist who was won over to the Marxian philosophy before he had an opportunity to see it put into effect in his own country. He was an apt and willing student in Moscow, but he apparently cherished the illusion that his own country could accept the communist form of government and still maintain its identity and its independence. The utter domination by Russia has become not only distasteful to Gottwald but also to at least two other members of his cabinet, including the minister of justice.

Gottwald is not the leader that Tito is and he probably can be brushed aside. But the viewpoint he has come to represent is pointed out as one of the weaknesses of the Russian system.

There is one other fact which cannot be hidden from the eyes of any careful observer with some military knowledge of Czechoslovakia. That is that the military preparations in the country which the Russians have carried out are almost 100 per cent defensive. Apparently, the Russian fear of invasion from the West is greater than their desire or ability to prepare for offensive warfare.

As proof of this, my informant told me that although one of the scarcest consumer products in Czechoslovakia is paper, two of the biggest mills manufacturing it were limiting their output to blackout paper only.

These are some of the reasons back of the theory which the people who believe in the old military axiom that you mustn't underestimate the enemy say is dangerous.

Things Are Rough in Peru

While the U. S. price index rose 8.9 per cent last year, living costs in Peru soared as high as the Andes—increasing 46.1 per cent. Between August, 1939, and December, 1947, living costs rose 69 per cent in the U. S. compared to 207 per cent in Peru, according to the Municipal Finance officers association. Among 11 nations for which comparable statistics are available, Canadian living costs have increased the least since before the war. Though the Canadian price index rose 14.9 per cent in 1947, it is only 45 per cent above the 1939 level of that country.

Here is the "top" spot on the boxcar construction line in Great Northern's car shops in St. Cloud, Minn. Modern assembly line procedures enable Great Northern to turn out 18 completely new boxcars daily. Shopmen in the picture are fabricating steel roofs for boxcars.

BOXCARS AND THE 1948 CROP

Great Northern believes in keeping its customers posted on problems of mutual concern and interest.

Harvest of another gigantic grain crop is approaching high tide in the Great Plains and Pacific Northwest states. Growers, country elevatormen, terminal market operators and grain processors share with the railways the hope that the 1948 crop can be moved to market with minimum delay.

Great Northern already has begun to move this year's grain crop. It is devoting a very large number of available cars to this exceedingly important service, and has been assured a larger supply of cars as the harvest progresses.

But, anxious as is Great Northern to provide maximum boxcar requirements for the grain movement, it knows that conditions over which the railway has no control will restrict the number of cars available.

A major contributing factor to the car shortage is lack of materials for car-building. The total boxcar ownership of American railways has not improved over this time last year because materials for new car construction have not been available in sufficient quantities to keep pace with retirement of worn-out equipment.

Great Northern has built 1000 new boxcars this year, and a large number of an additional 1,000 cars would have been in service this Fall had not a materials shortage stopped construction. The railway hopes it can resume within a few weeks a car-building program which will put 2,000 new boxcars on the rails by mid-1949.

The 40-hour week has reduced the working time of the boxcar. The Friday afternoon-to-Monday morning delay in loading and unloading by shippers and receivers has created an enormous loss in car usefulness—especially when there are not enough boxcars to meet demands.

Great Northern promises the same all-out effort it made during the past seven years of record grain crops and boxcar shortages to move the 1948 harvest to market in the shortest possible time.

Given the same superb assistance and encouragement it received last year from shippers and receivers of grain, Great Northern is confident it will turn out a transportation performance equalling that of last year, when Great Northern set a grain-moving record of 20,542 cars in September in spite of a boxcar shortage!

Income Study Released

In a special study of Marshall County individual income taxpayers released by G. Howard Spaeth, Commissioner of taxation, it was revealed that 914 individuals in Marshall County filed taxable individual income tax returns in the 1947 fiscal year. The total amount of state income taxes paid amounted to $59,766 an average of $65.39 for each state income taxpayer in Marshall County. The amount was 50 percent over 1946 when the average income taxpayer in Marshall Couty paid $97.80. WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Bumper Crops Due This Year, May Crack High Cost Living; Spy Probe Confusion Mounts

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SIDETRACKS . . . Two potential witnesses who were expected to add some information to the Washington Red spy hunt were Mrs. Oksana Stepanovna Kosenkina (left) and Alexander Koral. Neither did, however. Mrs. Kosenkina, who taught children of Russian U. N. officials in New York, made headlines by leaping from a third-story window in the Soviet consulate where she allegedly was being held against her will. Koral, billed as a "mystery witness" and accused of being a paid courier for the wartime Communist espionage ring, refused to tell anything he might know on the grounds that he would be incriminating himself.

CROP REPORT:
Momentous

There was momentous news from the nation's farms: In the cards for 1948 was a record-setting corn crop, the second largest wheat crop and substantial increases over last year in oats, barley and rye.

Government estimates, as of August 1, of this year's grain production read like a statistical fantasy of the promised land.

Bureau of agriculture economics reported that a corn crop of 3,506,363,000 bushels is indicated this year, far above 1947's small, weather-plagued crop of 2.4 billion bushels.

An approximate 1,284,323,000 bushels of wheat will be forthcoming this year. Other crop estimates were: Oats, 1,470,444,000 bushels; barley, 313,139,000 bushels, and rye, 26,664,000 bushels.

Trouble grew out of the fact that, although the huge crops are welcome this year, they may set the scene for huge postwar surpluses, mostly of corn and wheat.

Officials contend that there simply aren't enough animals left on the nation's farms to take care of the kind of production being achieved this year, particularly the corn outturn.

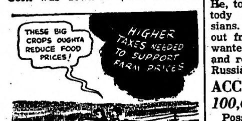
Immediate result of this sudden condition of oversupply probably will be the government's starting to support corn prices as soon as the crop starts moving. Other grain supports are likely to be evoked later.

Grain exports will be pushed, of course, but the export market is almost certain to fall off in a year or so because other nations also are intensifying their farm production with considerable success.

Deflation?

Brighter side of the crop situation is the fact that it promises the consumer almost certain relief from inflated food prices sooner or later, since grain supplies and prices are basic in determining cost of living at the household level.

Prices of most grains, as a matter of fact, already have broken. Corn was down to $2.02 a bushel from its postwar peak of $2.80. Wheat was down from $3.13 to $2.09, oats from $1.47 to 74 cents. Further decreases are inevitable when this year's great yield makes itself felt.



THESE BIG CROPS OUGHTA REDUCE FOOD PRICES!
HIGHER TAXES NEEDED TO SUPPORT FARM PRICES

Generally, cheaper grain means cheaper feed for livestock. Cheaper feed means less expensive meat in the butcher shop.

This apparently certain relief from the high cost of living is not just around the corner, however. It lies somewhere in the middle future. Prices probably will continue to rise somewhat for the rest of this year, after which the impact of the 1948 crop should be felt, causing them to come down.

Despite the optimistic outlook, there is another problem to complicate the picture. This year's great crops could lay the groundwork for farm gluts that would be followed by costly subsidies in the form of farm price supports.

Should another year of heavy crop yields follow this one, and should there be a recovery of agriculture abroad, tremendous surpluses in grains would result. Thus, U. S. taxpayers would stand to lose in the cost of price supports a good deal of what they might save in food prices.

CONFUSION:
And Spies

America's current top thriller, the Russian spy sensation, had developed more facets than a cylindrical lens in a lighthouse and each one was blinding to the eye of the beholder.

The motley group of persons called to testify before congressional investigating committees was growing and growing. It was getting to the point where even the witnesses had witnesses.

A sensational offshoot of the original spy investigation temporarily stole the spotlight from the main event. This was the battle of the schoolteachers—Mikhail I. Samarin and Mrs. Oksana Stepanovna Kosenkina, both U. N. personnel.

The goings on over this pair of Russian pedagogues seemed to be fairly complicated, but they could be boiled down to a sophisticated international game of run sheep run.

Both Samarin and Mrs. Kosenkina had appeared on the scene as potential witnesses in the congressional investigation. Then things started to happen.

First Mrs. Kosenkina disappeared for a few days. According to the official Soviet version, she had been "captured" by a group of anti-Communist White Russians and held prisoner. Then she was "rescued" by loyal U. S. S. R. subjects. A few days later she leaped from a window in the third story of the Soviet consulate in New York where, she said, she had been held captive. Driven to desperation by fear, she was seriously injured when she took the only way out.

On top of all this the other school teacher, Samarin, also disappeared. He, too, was supposed to be in custody of anti-Commie White Russians. However, information leaked out from the Samarin camp: He wanted to testify; he liked the U. S. and revolted against going back to Russia.

ACCIDENTS:
100,000 Deaths

Possibly the most shocking set of statistics compiled year in and year out in the U. S. is that dealing with the nation's accidental death rate.

In 1947, National Safety council has disclosed, about 100,000 persons died accidentally. The full accident toll was approximately 2,000 deaths higher than in 1946.

Accidents in the home accounted for a majority of all the deaths listed by the council. There were 34,500 such fatalities. The total also included 32,300 traffic and 17,000 occupational deaths.

Some of the other facts released in the annual report:

More people died in disasters last year than in 1946—550 in the stupendous Texas City explosion, 167 in a Texas-Oklahoma tornado, 111 in the Centralia, Ill., mine blast, and 198 in airplane crashes.

Total of 20,900 deaths resulted from rural traffic accidents, while city traffic accidents accounted for 11,400 fatalities.

211.9 BILLION

U. S. Personal Income Still on Elevator

Everybody works. Everybody makes money. That is the theme song of the American people who are, nevertheless, twisting and turning in the clutches of an intolerable condition of inflation.

But the money keeps on rolling in. Personal income hit a historic high rate of 211.9 billion dollars in June, the commerce department has reported That figure is 2.5 billion dollars above the total personal income for May.

Responsible for the large May-to-June increase were the absence of major strikes, impact of third-round wage boosts in durable goods industries and higher prices received by farmers for livestock, the department of commerce said. Wage and salary payments jumped 2.3 billion dollars in June.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: I have bronze screens that have been discolored because someone rubbed yellow soap all over them. This has made them green. I have tried to clean them by washing them and also used kerosene, but this has not helped. I would appreciate any suggestions.

ANSWER: I believe wiping the screens with a cloth dampened with ammonia would take off the green discoloration. Be careful of ammonia fumes. If this fails, try a good metal polish. An alternative would be to wash with ordinary vinegar, in which has been dissolved as much salt as will be taken up; then rinse well with clear water. The solution can be made into a paste by the addition of flour.

QUESTION: My chimney has leaked for years. Numerous repairmen could not find the leak. I also had a waterproof coating applied. The leak is over the fireplace. Can you advise me?

ANSWER: There may be breaks in the mortar joints, especially at the joint over the fireplace. Or the bricks themselves may be old and porous. Defective flashings at the roof line might be another cause. Try to get a good chimney mason to visit the house on a rainy day and find out just where the trouble lies. He may advise putting on a chimney cap, for rain may come down the chimney. Perhaps a tuck-pointing job may be needed, and also a coating of cement base paint containing a waterproofer.

Insects Cause Food Loss

Insect pests reduced cottonseed production last year by an amount which would have provided 4,500,000 people for a year with as much fat as now is included in European diets. Each 100 pounds of cottonseed meal will replace 250 to 300 pounds of grain when the oil meal is used for livestock feed. Some authorities estimate that control of insects that attack corn would add 100 million bushels to annual yields.

Married Women Earning More

For the first time in history married women outnumber single women with paying jobs, according to Paul C. Glick of the U. S. bureau of census.

Since 1940, Glick says, there has been a 50 per cent increase in the working wives labor force. Today, the husband is the sole provider in only three fifths of the husband and wife household.

"Five sixths of the married women working have either no dependent children in the home or children of school age only," Glick explains. Glick believes this means the advance of the standards of family living.

Deal the Bread!

The company cook brought in a plateful of extremely thin slices of bread and butter, which rather dismayed the hungry outfit.

"Did you cut these, sergeant?" asked one.

"Yes, I cut them," came the stern answer.

"Okay," replied the soldier, "I'll shuffle and deal."

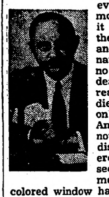
Washington Digest

Ghost of Latvia Recalls Memories of Better Days

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator

WASHINGTON—At the end of one of those few pleasant summer days which Washington gives us, I was walking homeward from a mission in a part of town which I hadn't visited recently. I found myself in a neighborhood which seemed to produce a slightly nostalgic feeling.

The street took a quick up-turn and, for a short block, was quite steep. Most of the houses were new but there was one with a colored glass window such as graced many a home that I visited as a child. Such windows were usually on the staircase landing, at the turn, and when the sun shone through them it tossed a handful of jewels on the carpet. I always wanted to pick them up. That, I thought as I walked along, is nostalgic—childhood memories.



But I was wrong. Soon I realized that the memory which the stained glass window evoked was much more recent. But it did stir ghosts, the ghost of a man and the ghost of a nation, for there is no reason why dead nations, which really never quite died, must not live on in some form. And Washington is not without such disembodied sovereignites. I had seen the man whose memory the multicolored window had stirred for the first time when he was descending a stairway with just such a window behind him. He was Alfred Bilmanis and he died in July of this year. He was the minister of the republic of Latvia which had "died" eight years ago but according to the state department was and is of such corporeal quality that, along with its sister republics of Lithuania and Estonia, it still possesses diplomatic representatives who are recognized on equal terms with those of living nations.

It was in August of 1940 that the Red army marched into the Baltic states and they became by force majeure, territorially a part of the U. S. S. R.

But the three little democracies were prepared politically, if not diplomatically. A month or so earlier, by due process of parliamentary law, a decree was promulgated which made the Latvian minister to London chief of the Latvian state if the Russians took over her territory. Today Charles Zarena, minister to Britain, remains the head of the diplomatic corps of the republic of Latvia.

Bilmanis continued to serve his ghost-government in the United States after the Russian seizure. Up to then he had helped to keep the bonds firm between us and his little country whose people reached the shores of the Baltic back in the early days of European history, along with the only two other remaining groups which are at least linguistically, if not ethically, related to the Latts: the Finns and the Magyars.

The last president of the free republic of Latvia, Carl Ulmanis was American trained. He lived in Nebraska where he waited in exile and worked for his country's independence. He studied agriculture and when he returned to Latvia in that hopeful heydey of Europe's new republics after World War I. he carried back ideas. One of them was the 4-H clubs.

Latvia was 60 per cent agricultural and among its population of only two million, the 4-H movement grew, adapted of course to its new environment, to 40,000 when I heard of it last before the iron curtain descended.

There were interchanges of visits between the countries and, whenever the big 4-H encampment took place in Washington, the little Latvian legation echoed to the cheerful chatter of American children who drank lemonade and heard the big, smiling man with the expressive ruddy hands, tell of his country and show pictures of the children there at work on their projects or going through their folk dances in the gay costumes of their land.

The American kids looked at the paintings that covered the walls—for Bilmanis was quite a collector. They were allowed gingerly to try the great chair which Napoleon had taken back to France from Moscow, examine the delightful little ivories, the china and the other objets d'art which filled the legation.

And then, one by one, they tripped up the stairs to look at the life-size model of the Latvian girl in the traditional robes of the country, wearing the symbolic necklace made of great discs of amber. Amber had been a Latvian article of export since the earliest traders from the Mediterranean made their way to this northern land, for it was a much admired ornament for the ladies of ancient Rome and Greece. A good necklace was supposed to be worth an Arabian mount.

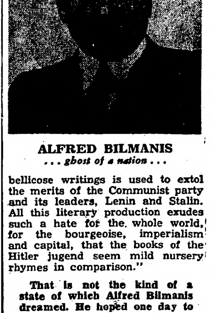
If there is any amber being collected on Latvian beaches today it is being turned into the coffers of the Kremlin. I can well imagine what happened to the 4-H organizations when the Reds stepped in—they are about as closely akin to the Communist youth as the boy scouts were to the Hitler jugend. But if we are to believe all we hear, Latvia is resisting communization. Only this week I received a copy of the Baltic Review, printed in Sweden. Here is one paragraph:

"With the coming scholastic year war games will be introduced as an obligatory subject in the schools of all the constituent Soviet republics, writes 'Cina,' the organ of the Communist party in Latvia. The paper goes on to say that the international situation demands that children be taught the art of war as early as possible. Military discipline should be instilled in them even before they come to school. Their toys should be model tanks and planes and so-called children's 'mechanos' or building boxes should consist of parts whereof these objects can be constructed. The author relates about his trip to Russia to study Soviet education and military training and remarks that in this respect the Baltic republics are very backward as yet. Pupils of seven and eight in the schools of Moscow had displayed quite surprising knowledge as regards military matters. Ten year olds had been experts with the rifles and girls had been as competent as boys. Even tiny tots four and five had known the rudiments of military drill. How useful this proficiency may be in a guerilla war, exclaims the author."

What is going to happen to the next generation in the U. S. S. R. itself and in the countries dominated by her? Listen to this further extract from the Baltic Review:

Communists' Ideas About Education

"Every Soviet school manual, every work of fiction for children and young people, every periodical for the rising generation is a manifestation of a war-like spirit worthy of the Huns of old. Innumerable are the glorifications in them of all sorts of heroic exploits of Soviet people during World War II., to enter a military school is represented as the highest aim of every Soviet boy and 80 per cent of the pictures show guns, tanks, infantry or cavalry exercises. Picture books for tiny tots exhibit children playing with rifles, tanks and grenades, every game taught to the young has a military purpose. This little bit of space that is left over from these aggressive and bellicose writings is used to extol the merits of the Communist party and its leaders, Lenin and Stalin. All this literary production exudes such a hate for the whole world, for the bourgeoise, imperialism and capital, that the books of the Hitler jugend seem mild nursery rhymes in comparison."



ALFRED BILMANIS
. . . ghost of a nation . . .

That is not the kind of a state of which Alfred Bilmanis dreamed. He hoped one day to return with his valuable possessions and build a museum in his own restored country. Though he continued to serve as minister, his funds ran low and he had to part with many of his things. However, he did save some of the paintings, Napoleon's chair and the lady and her beads.

Perhaps someday others may realize his dream — some happy day—when freedom in Europe is returned and the ghost republics of the Baltic become real once more for the people who inhabit them.

More Money Spent During 1948

Americans during 1948 are buying houses and automobiles faster than they can be produced and indebtedness is increasing, according to the Federal Reserve Board's 1948 survey of consumer finances.

Fewer folk are saving in 1948 than the year previous. Some 3 million consumers who had savings bonds in 1947 didn't have them the first of 1948. Consumers are doing more of their paying on a credit basis than a year ago. Because buying has increased, they're using more of their savings than before.

It is expected that about one-fourth of the consumers will spend beyond their income in 1948 as they did in 1947.

High Costs Not Hitched On Farm Prices - Brandt States

With living costs going up while prices on most farm products have shown a decided drop it is easily discernible that the price the farmer receives does not play such an important part in the high cost of living after all, John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes Creameries pointed out today.

"Consumers seem to feel that farm prices must go down if cost of living is to be reduced," Brandt said.

"Just recently General Motors put into effect a 3c-an-hour wage increase as a compensating factor in the increased cost of living as determined by the government. This increase goes into effect when most farm prices have taken a decided decline.

In fact, the price of farm grains has been on the decline since early spring. These price declines include wheat, corn, cotton, oats, barley, rye and dairy products. The one exception is the price of meat.

"With the exception of butter and cheese, consumer prices do not reflect or follow the trend of farm prices. Possibly the only reason these two items follow in direct relationship is because in this line of endeavor the cooperative organizations exercise the greatest degree of control of the product from the time it is produced until it reaches the retail store. This competition of cooperatives in processing and sale of manufactured dairy products forces the entire field of operators into the same price category as that reflected through operation of cooperative associations.

"When grains go down 20c, 30c, 50c to $1 a bushel, the price of bread and various cereals, as well as beer and whiskey, does not follow the downward trend. But if you were to follow the butter and cheese markets, you would note that the price to the consumer changes the very next day, either up or down, as is reflected in the wholesale market of these products.

"This should be convincing evidence that there is much to the claim of cooperatives that they benefit both producer and consumer."

Brandt added that "much of the talk about the high cost of living is in reality the cost of high living."

Everyone has become accustomed to having more than before, he explained. Many items not real necessities are definitely in the inflated category. There never was a time in America when so many people had so much of everything, and there never was a time when there was so much grumbling about our ability to buy so many things at high cost.

If farm prices go down much further the farmer's inability to buy the necessities and some of the city luxuries will soon have the effect of reducing the income of city folks to the extent that there may be real cause to grumble.

On Tuesday evening the following visited at the A. O. Aspelin home honoring Caroline on her brithday which was the previous day; Mrs. Louis Swenby, Mrs. Geo. Fricker, Mrs. C. Gunheim, Mrs. J. Hagberg, Mrs. C. Davis Mrs. Wm. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. John Sorum, LaRue Fricker and Carol Smith.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period, collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The parallel in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

Business men and Farmers, who successfully survive recessions and depressions are those who meet it with a small proportion of indebtedness.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Registers Cold War Victory; Moscow Talks Headed for Failure; Truman, Congress in Budget Fight

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR
Villian Revealed

At last something had happened that could and did make people understand what this Russian situation was all about.

It had been pretty difficult going for the world public to perceive the basic truth when it was obscured by confusing circumstances like currency reform in Berlin, control of the German Ruhr, a maze of spies at home and political annihilation of small European nations by Russia.

What it all amounted to, as far as most people were concerned, was a mess of verbal pottage that they wouldn't trade for the comics page any day of the week.

Then it happened. Mrs. Oksana Kosenkina, the Russian school teacher, jumped from a third-story window in the Soviet consulate in New York to achieve the liberty she so desperately sought.

Mikhail Samarin, the other Russian school teacher, was wanted by the Russians but managed to retain his freedom. Refusing the Soviet demand that he return to Russia, he tossed this scallion for the Communists into the propaganda war: "I won't return to death."

And finally, in England Olympic athletes from Czechoslovakia and other Soviet satellite states were steadfastly refusing to return to their home countries after their taste of a free land.

It all added up to the biggest break the western nations have had yet in their propaganda battle with the East.

This was simple, basic, understandable: These people from the land of the Soviets—the schoolteachers and athletes—utterly despised the idea of returning. They simply would not do it.

Thus, it was in the end a few ordinary persons who destroyed the elaborate fabrication which Moscow had constructed to represent to the world the ideal way of life that existed in the Soviet Union.

One Voice of America spokesman said: "This is what we have been waiting for in our war of words. This is something that can be easily understood by people all over the world."

The Communists tried frantically to cover this breach in their curtain by calling it, among other things, an underground conspiracy in the U. S. to wreck any possibility for peace between the two nations.

But the villian's disguise was off now and everyone knew him. Try as they might, the Communists never would be able to explain why two obscure school teachers would seek their freedom so desperately, nor why Russia was so determined to get them back.

PARLEY:
Failure

From Moscow came crushing news for all those hoping for peace: The talks between the western democracies and Russia were reported to be on the brink of failure.

Barring a last-minute miracle in the conferences between the U. S., England, France and Russia, the East-West stalemate would continue, along with the Soviet blockade of Berlin.

It was reported that the western powers were getting ready to stay in Berlin under conditions of economic siege, planning to maintain and enlarge the air lift to supply the 2.5 million persons in their sectors.

There was, however, one slim chance that utter failure could be avoided. The three western ambassadors were scheduled for a final talk with Premier Stalin, and it was a possibility that the negotiations might be rescued. But the odds against agreement stood at about five to one, officials said.

If the conference ended in the anticipated failure, it was thought that the Big Four governments would try to conceal the extent of the fiasco from the public in order to avoid the even greater degeneration of East-West relationships that undoubtedly would result if everyone knew just how hopeless the case was.

However, if the Moscow talks did break up in futility it would not mean necessarily that all similar negotiations would be abandoned. It would mean that any further effort to reopen them would be delayed until at least next spring—possibly March—after the election and inauguration.

BUDGET:
Unbalanced

Will there be a surplus or deficit in the government's budget at the end of this fiscal year?

It was a question good for a lot of political haymaking, and both President Truman and his Republican opponents in congress went to work with a will.

Mr. Truman's forecast was that the government would be 1.5 billion dollars in the red next June. In his mid-year budget report he blamed the Republicans' "ill-timed" five-billion-dollar tax cut for putting the nation back in the hole.

Stricken with horror, GOP lawmakers rapped back sharply: Far from harboring a deficit, they said, the treasury will close its books next June with a surplus of between five and six billion dollars.

The President had juggled figures for political campaign effect, the Republicans charged bitterly.

"Another of the weird distortions which are coming from the White House while its occupant is a nervous candidate for re-election," commented Sen. Styles Bridges (Rep., N. H.) mordaciously.

Mr. Truman had said that federal expenditures this year would hit 42 billion dollars, while Republicans claim that actual expenses will total 38 billion. They charged, too, that the President had figured the national income 3.4 billion dollars too low for the year.

Just who was right in the matter, if anyone, was impossible to say. The entire affair had many of the characteristics of the kind of tempest in a teapot that is a run-of-the-mill event in an election year.

Actually, even if President Truman's estimate turns out to be the correct one, the books still will show an "adjusted surplus," despite the 1.5-billion-dollar operating deficit. That is because congress provided that three billion of the surplus last year should be shifted to this year's accounts to help meet foreign aid costs.

PSYCHIATRY:
War Cure

How can the world prevent wars? Use of psychiatry would be a big help, according to Dr. John Milne Murray, professor of clinical psychiatry at Boston university.

A psychiatrist, he said, is one who seeks the reason for the failure of human relations in the individual rather than in the mass.

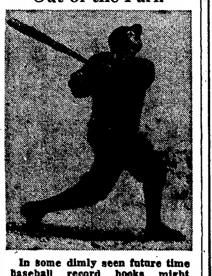
"But," he asked, "what is war except a mass breakdown of inadequate relations ending up in a tremendous burst of self-destruction?"

Take, for instance, the reactions of a child trying to adjust itself to a harsh environment. Under stress the child may revert to archaic forms of behavior, and that is very similar to the impulse of destruction which, on a world-wide scale, becomes war.

Therefore, knowledge of mass human reactions should be employed to abolish war, Dr. Murray concluded.

Actually, it's all very simple. If people didn't act the way they do they wouldn't have to fight each other. The trick is to make them understand that.

Out of the Park



In some dimly seen future time baseball record books might fall into dust, but there will be those who still talk of Babe Ruth. And among kids the legend of the Babe might grow into this: Every baseball he ever hit he hit for a home run. And some might smile at the exaggeration but say nothing because it will be a magnificent story.

Paper Work

War-guilt trials of the Japanese war lords in Tokyo produced literally tons of evidence—bale after bale of recorded testimony and documentary proof of the Jap war criminals' carryings-on. Job of translating all the data will take five weeks, after which the international military tribunal will hand down its verdicts.

MASARYK:
Murdered?

Last March 10 Jan Masaryk, foreign minister of Czechoslovakia under the Communist regime, fell to his death from a third-story window in the foreign office in Prague.

Since then Masaryk's friends, as well as many who never knew him but admired him because of his hopeless fight in behalf of Czechoslovakia's national liberty, have speculated long as to whether he committed suicide or was killed by the Communists who wanted him out of the way.

The official Communist version of the incident was suicide, but too many persons had too many doubts to let it rest at that.

Then, suddenly, last month the doubts were crystallized. Dr. Oskar Klinger, Masaryk's personal physician, asserted that the Czech statesman did not commit suicide.

He was sure of that, he said, because he and Masaryk had planned to escape by plane to Great Britain on the very day that Masaryk died.

Klinger said that the security police discovered Masaryk's plan to flee and came to his rooms that night to arrest or kill him. Defending himself, Masaryk shot and killed possibly four men.

With the remaining men closing in, Klinger's version went, Masaryk was forced closer and closer to the window. Then, the men either threw him out the window or, overwhelmed by fear, Masaryk flung himself out.

In proof of his conviction, Klinger offered this evidence:

Masaryk would never have committed suicide because he was afraid of physical pain. Also, he left no note or letter—a usual practice in suicides.

Shots were heard in the building the night he died, and four coffins were carried from the place that morning before the Czech commission arrived to inspect Masaryk's body, indicating that four persons might have been killed during the night.

? Current Events ?

Here are five questions, based on recent happenings in the news, which are guaranteed not to keep you awake nights. Unless, that is, you stay up late to read the paper anyway.

1. Several witnesses before the house un-American activities committee, refusing to answer questions about Communist activities, invoked the fifth amendment to the Constitution. What does the amendment say?

2. President Truman said recently that a "woman president of the U. S. "was not only a possibility, but a probability" some day. At present the Constitution prohibits a woman from becoming president. True or false?

3. Population of the U. S. is 143,414,000. Name the nations that have larger populations in order of their size.

4. What outstanding war events took place three years ago on these dates: August 8, August 9, August 14?

5. Born in 1865, he was governor of Kansas from 1915 to 1919 and became a senator in 1919. Recently he retired from the senate as its senior member in point of service. Who is he?

ANSWERS

1. "No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself . . ."
2. False. Only presidential qualifications required are that he be born in the U. S., be a resident of the country for 14 years and at least 35 years old.
3. China (470 million), Union of India (389 million), U. S. S. R. (193 million).
4. August 8 Nagasaki was atom bombed; August 9 Russia declared war on Japan; August 14 Japan surrendered.
5. Sen. Arthur Capper (Rep., Kas.)

BOXCARS:
No Worries

Despite all-time record production and the bumper crops forecast for this year, U. S. railroads do not expect as tight a boxcar situation this autumn as has prevailed during the past several years.

Southwestern grain, bulking larger than any other section, has begun to taper off, more cars are available in the Northwest this year than last and terminals still have space for storage.

WHAT'LL YA HAVE, GENTS?

How About 55 Gallons of Black Coffee?

Coffee and milk, by a wide margin, remain the favorite beverages of American drinkers who will down nearly eight billion gallons of coffee and nearly seven billion gallons of milk in 1948.

The report on the national liquid intake, compiled by the family economics bureau of Northwestern National Life Insurance company, also estimates that about 2.7 billion gallons of beer and 1.7 billion gallons of assorted soft drinks will be consumed this year.

Coffee consumption comes to 55 gallons per capita in 1948. The grand total of 7.95 billion gallons would make a circular lake one and a half miles across and 20 feet deep. It would keep a Niagara falls cataract flowing for 67 minutes—without cream or sugar.

As Pegler Sees It

By Westbrook Pegler
Released by WNU Features.

THE TOUGH LANGUAGE and the practical gangsterism of the Russians mark a change so dangerous that suppression of thoughts upon the possibility of war would be a repetition of the British mistake at the time of Munich. Governor Dewey recently said "we must not even think of war." He may have been right at the time. NOW WE HAD BETTER THINK ABOUT WAR.

PEGLER

The Russians' attitude and the official conduct of her generals, diplomats and spies have been consistently more and more beligerent ever since the Potsdam conference. We now are reduced to the status of a weak Balkan country in the Russian estimate. Her contempt is shown by the open defiance of our laws and our courts in our own country and the frank threat to punish the United States because our congress has dared to investigate Russian espionage.

They never spoke thus until they were ready to move into the phase of provocation which precedes the breach of diplomatic relations and war.

These relations were an advantage to Russia from 1933 down to the present. Hereafter, the Soviets would be better off and we would be worse off as diplomatic strangers. They could continue their spying, and Communist riots on picket lines could be developed into serious civil war in the city of New York at least.

Insidious in Practice

The recent stunning disclosures about the Communist penetration of some of the most influential offices of the United States government by traitors who have confessed or refused to answer questions that no loyal American would hestitate to answer, again follow the course of Soviet penetration and the debilitation of native governments in the Balkans.

Thousands have seen this done on a smaller scale in unions of the C. I. O. which were controlled by Communists.

We have a law which, in time of declared war, permits us to throw into concentration camps all persons who seem to the military authority to be dangerous for any reason.

The supreme court has upheld this law against attacks on constitutional grounds. Although it applies only in the actual state of war, this law could be amended so as to permit the immurement of most of the known and potential pro-Russian traitors and other anti-American agents who swarm in New York and Hollywood.

The court deliberately flouted intelligence in ruling that this law did not countenance racial selection of such prisoners, as it certainly did, but that dishonesty by the court is advantageous now. No matter what the "race" or "creed" of the traitors and spies locked up, no plea of discrimination can prevail against that solemn judgment. THE ROSTERS OF THE COMMUNIST AND WALLACE PARTIES AND THE AMERICAN LABOR PARTY OF NEW YORK WOULD BE USEFUL DIRECTORIES IN THE SELECTION.

Wallace Aid Revealed

Persons who permit themselves to believe that it isn't so bad as all this are ill informed. The high government official mentioned so skittishly of late as having enabled shipments to Russia of stuff used in the atomic bomb was Henry Wallace.

He once told me that he would do "anything" to keep Russia in the war against Hitler when Hitler was Russia's only enemy and Japan was our principal enemy. Why would it have been necessary for the vice president of the United States to do "anything" to induce Russia to fight Hitler?

Wallace probably had legal authority to do as he did. If not, some shyster in the department of justice or state would create an illusion of law to justify whatever he did.

The F. B. I. reported to President Truman years ago that the wife of one of Wallace's close workers was a courier-spy for Russia during the war and carried packages from spies on the New York waterfront to Russian agents in North Africa. She was employed as a highly confidential agent in an American counter-espionage service. Today she is campaigning openly in American politics for the candidate of the Kremlin.

Mr. Truman had this report on his desk for years along with all the other information which has been gushing out in the recent hearings. He tacitly admits that he had it but defends his suppression of truth on the grounds that a grand jury which heard it refused to indict.

Nation's Grasslands Stand For Security in Agriculture

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"The grasslands, hay lands and forested range lands of the entire United States cover more than a billion acres, nearly 60 per cent of the total land area. They furnish about half of the feed for all the livestock."

That statement is quoted from the new AGRICULTURE YEAR BOOK titled "Grass," last copies of which now are being delivered to congressmen for their constituents.

Purpose of this book is to contribute to the lore and practice of the American farmer so he may help to attain "permanency in agriculture."

BAUKHAGE

This permanency is obtainable, says P. V. Cardon, in the opening chapter of this splendid 900-page book, by means of "—an agriculture that is stable and secure for farm and farmers, consistent in prices and earnings; an agriculture that can satisfy indefinitely all our needs of food, fibre and shelter in keeping with the living standards we set. Everybody has a stake in a permanent agriculture."

Grassland is, according to the many experts who have contributed to this volume, the foundation of security in agriculture.

Grasslands, by the sheer force of their need, have increased from an original 700 million acres to the present billion. Believers in grass expect that acreage to be increased, and I have no doubt that this book will help.

Grass means to these students of the Gramineae family, wheat, corn, rice, sugarcane, sorghum, millet, barley, oats, many of the sod crops which provide forage or pasturage and the associated legumes, clover, lespedezas, alfalfa and others.

The trend toward grassland agriculture in America existed for some 10 years but was interrupted for intensive cultivation during the war. Now it is increasing again, according to Cardon who has been engaged in agriculture research since 1910. But he points out that grassland's agriculture supplements rather than replaces other farm production — for example, livestock production, with which it is inseparably linked.

"Grassland agriculture," he says, "under good management may equal or increase the production of digestible nutrients, reduce materially the labor needed to grow them and lower the cost of supplying protein necessary to nourish animals."

There are many interesting and widely varying chapters, progressing from the general to the more specific. The editor, Alfred Stefferud, has summarized the book as separated into four parts. The first is an examination of grass as it applies to people anywhere with the emphasis on livestock and soils and conservation. Forage for livestock, the use and value of pastures, grass and rotations, and range, as a major resource and grass "for happier living" on the playing fields, lawns, highway shoulders and airfields.

Technicians selecting male buffalo grass to secure pollen for breeding to improve strains at the buffalo grass survey at Woodward, Okla.

Other parts of the book are devoted to the uses, nature and identification of various grasses and finally there are detailed charts, tables, recommendations for seedings and mixtures.

Scope of the topics is wide, for the subject involves not only the varying conditions of soil and climate, but also social conditions affecting the tenure of land and the lives of the people, along with shifts in national policies and political trends.

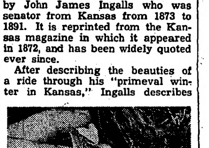
There is no more striking example of how these purely external conditions affect the farmer than in England today, where a complete change in that country's agriculture was brought about during the war and continued since. The great parks, private estates, preserves and forests have been broken up under pressure to raise food which formerly was imported.

The general trends in America have been less obstructed by external influences.

"Grass" is a book for cityman as well as farmer, and among the vast compilation of data resulting from experiment, record and research, there are even a few pages given to a panegyric whose poetic fervor makes up for what may be a lack of purely scientific background.

I can't help quoting from the article, "In Praise of Blue Grass," by John James Ingalls who was senator from Kansas from 1873 to 1891. It is reprinted from the Kansas magazine in which it appeared in 1872, and has been widely quoted ever since.

After describing the beauties of a ride through his "primeval winter in Kansas," Ingalls describes his descent into a valley where, he says, was created "the strange spectacle of June in January," peculiar to his native state.



Close up showing method of pollinating female buffalo grass flower with pollen from selected male strain.

"A sudden descent into the sheltered valley," he writes, "revealed an unexpected crescent of dazzling verdure, glittering like a meadow in early spring, unreal as an incantation, surprising as the sea to the soldiers of Zenophon as they stood upon the shore and shouted 'Thalatta!' It was Blue Grass, unknown in Eden, the final triumph of nature, reserved to compensate her favorite offspring in the new Paradise of Kansas for the loss of the old upon the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates."

Is Truman Another Boy on Burning Deck?

It may be just as well that Washington has not only its proverbially-unbearable weather, but that it has a political campaign as well to take its mind off more serious troubles.

It started out as a rather dull campaign with the Republicans positive of victory and the Democrats showing an overweening willingness to get used to the idea of looking for another job.

But ever since Harry Truman's peppy speech at the Democratic convention, you frequently run into a Democrat who actually thinks his party has a chance in November.

One loyal adherent to the party of Jackson and Jefferson approached me with a theory that Truman had a very good chance of winning on the psychological basis.

"You know," he said to me, "deep down in the subconscious of every American is a boy-on-the-burning deck complex." (If you belong to the older generation, you probably recited Casabianca on assembly day at school):

. . . the boy stood on the burning deck,
Whence all but him had fled;
The flame that lit the battle's wreck,
Shone round him o'er the dead.

"I didn't get it at first, but the explanation is simple and not illogical. There probably never has been a more outstanding example of a one-man show than Harry Truman's performance at the Democratic convention.

My friend went on: "Most Americans at one time or another have pictured themselves as rising to the occasion, alone and unsupported, taking on all comers, swinging to the right and left regardless of the odds, holding the fort or storming the redoubt or saving the child whence all but him had fled."

He want on to say: "Americans see this spunky little fighter who wears a confident smile when most of his colleagues have faces as long as a new-look skirt, and they imagine themselves in his place.

"As any schoolboy who has studied psychiatry knows, there will be a transference displacing the affect from one person to another motivated by the unconscious identification of the voter with the boy on the burning deck and from the boy on the burning deck to the Democratic candidate."

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: How should plaster walls that show dampness through the wallpaper be treated? Some say that using black asphaltum on the wall would waterproof it. But how will wallpaper be over this material? Aluminum paint is said to be good for sealing the wall. But will wallpaper hold over this?

ANSWER: I would not advise using black asphaltum for this purpose. Your wallpaper may be pulpy and absorbent, and probably the plaster also absorbs and holds much of the dampness from the air. Before repapering, and after removing the present paper, try the effect of painting the walls with good aluminum paint. Let this dry, apply a glue size, and then hang a washable type of wallpaper or an oilcloth type of wall covering. If there is excessive moisture in the air of your house, try to locate the cause.

QUESTION: There is a "ring" in the ceiling where some patching had been done. Will this correct itself if the ceiling is repapered after a lapse of several months?

ANSWER: It is possible that the plaster may have disintegrated from excessive dampness or leakage, and the discoloration should be examined by a plasterer and taken care of before paper is hung. When the patching was done, it may be that not enough plaster was cut out, and a damaged area still remains.

Columbus Letter Up for Sale

A rare auction of important historical documents will be held in London soon. Probably the item which will command the highest price is the letter written by Christopher Columbus in which he announced his discovery of the New World.

This letter is one of the 7,000 rare documents dealing with five centuries of North and South American history to be sold. They are in a collection formed by the late Sir Leicester Harmsworth.

Among the other items are the prayer book of Benjamin Franklin and the deed of sale of East New Jersey by William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania.

Feeding Chicks

Chick creeps give the young birds a better chance for normal growth than when they have to compete with mature birds for the feed they obtain. Such creeps can be made by constructing a pen six feet square of vertical slats placed two and one-half inches apart. The chicks will soon learn to enter this pen for feed and water where they are not molested by the mature birds. Chicks should not be reared with old birds, except where hens are used for brooding, in which case the creep is a good investment.

G. N. RY. Car Supply Ample

Confidence that Great Northern's car supply in September will be ample to meet grain requirements was expressed today by President F. J. Gavin following the third largest grain movement in the railway's history.

He said the September volume cannot be accurately forecast, but it will depend largely on grain buying, ability of terminal markets to absorb shipments and continued cooperation by shippers and receivers in expediting loading and unloading.

Grain loaded and moved on Great Northern last month amounted to 20,045 cars as compared with August totals of 13,874 last year, 21, 431 in in 1939 and 25,901 in 1938. The latter was the railway's all-time high.

Mr. Gavin, commenting on last month's movement, lauded the Association of American Railroads for providing cars and the "splendid cooperation of most shippers and receivers in speedy loading and unloading of cars."

Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Wetter were given a wedding reception a the Ringbo church on Sunday. A good program was given and a delicious lunch served. The honored couple received many lovely gifts.

Visitors at the Wm. Fluke home Sunday were Mrs. David McKinley David, Jimmy and Paul of Benson, Minn., Mr. and Mrs. H. Heinze of Thief River Falls., Mrs. K. T. Sollom. Norma, Marian, Verna and Elvida.

Lt. L. H. Moline writes us from Ft. Wm. D. Davis, Canal Zone, that he sits there wondering what is doing in the big, little city of Holt. Roy is serving there in the Army and is a subscriber to the News.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Augustine and daughter of Red Wing visited relatives here last week. Wednesday and Thursday they and Mr. and Mrs. Marlan Augustine and J. P. Augustine made a trip to Winnepeg.

Good Pasture Practices Add Grazing Days, Boost Herd's Milk Flow and Cut Feed Cost

Well Fertilized Pastures Are Cheapest Source of High Protein Feed.

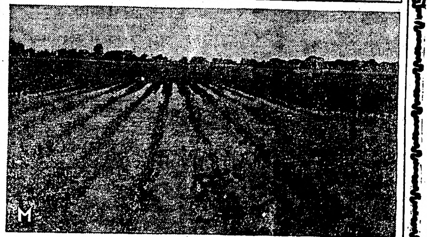
CHICAGO—It costs only about one-fourth as much to produce milk on good pasture as it costs to feed a dairy herd on grain and hay, according to a statement issued here by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, based on statistics cited recently by G. A. Williams of the Purdue University dairy extension department.

Emphasizing that the difference between good and poor pasture is largely a matter of management, Williams lists these pasture practices that are cutting costs and raising milk flow:

1. Seed high-yielding pasture mixtures that give extra grazing days in spring and fall. A good legume-grass mixture produces more milk than either crop grown separately.
2. Rotate your grazing and avoid overgrazing. For high production, divide your pasture acreage into two or three fields.
3. Add plant nutrients so the soil can feed the legumes and grasses. During a six months' pasture season a cow removes from the soil approximately 115 pounds of nitrogen, 26 pounds of phosphate, 93 pounds of potash, and 37 pounds of lime. Unless these nutrients are returned in the form of plowed-under legumes, commercial fertilizer and barnyard manure, the land becomes too poor to produce good grass.

"Dairymen," said Williams, "are finding it increasingly more profitable to purchase commercial fertilizer to supplement the supply of barnyard manure available than it is to buy high-priced concentrates."

Deep-Rooted Legumes and Grasses Called Tool for Opening Up Poorly Drained Soil



Tight Soil Causes Ponding on Corn Field.

CHICAGO—If your soil doesn't drain well, look to the condition of your soil as well as to your drain tile system, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"The slow down may be caused by damaged soil structure and loss of organic matter," says a statement issued by the committee. "Putting in more drain tile may give you temporary relief. But it is not a permanent solution.

"Many corn belt soils need unclogging. The structure of silt loams, clay loams and clays has been broken down by too many grain crops and too few legume crops. Working wet soils with heavy machinery has made matters worse.

tool for opening this stopped up soil is deep-rooted legumes and grasses in the rotation. The tap-roots of sweet clover and alfalfa well fed with phosphate and potash pierce the compacted soil. Plowed under legume roots and tops build up the organic matter supply. When this organic matter decomposes it gives off compounds that stick soil particles together in loose granules. When your soil is loose and grainy it has good tilth.

"How deep-rooted legumes help improve drainage was shown in Iowa tests. Silt loam that had been in alfalfa three years absorbed 2½ inches of water in the first three hours following a rain. Soil left bare of crops absorbed only about half an inch of rain in this time."

Welfare Workshop Monday

The third annual Lutheran Welfare Workshop for this area will be held at Trinity Lutheran Church, Thief River Falls on Monday Sept 13, from 10:00 a. m to 4:00 p.m. Lutheran Welfare congregational chairmen, officers of church organizations, pastors and other persons working with children, are urged to attend.

It is imperative, says Mr. S. W. Solyst, county chairman, that we understand the many family disturbances and personal problems that brought 888 children, babies and unwed mothers to the Lutheran Welfare Society for help during the past year. The Workshop will analyze their problems and describe the services given. There will be a chance for individual conferences in the afternoon with Miss Agnes Thorson, director of adoptions and Miss JeAnn Wick, Lutheran Welfare Case Worker assigned to this area.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period, collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The parallel in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

G. N. RY. Car Supply Ample

Confidence that Great Northern's car supply in September will be ample to meet grain requirements was expressed today by President F. J. Gavin following the third largest grain movement in the railway's history.

He said the September volume cannot be accurately forecast, but it will depend largely on grain buying, ability of terminal markets to absorb shipments and continued cooperation by shippers and receivers in expediting loading and unloading.

Grain loaded and moved on Great Northern last month amounted to 20,045 cars as compared with August totals of 13,874 last year, 21, 431 in in 1939 and 25,901 in 1938. The latter was the railway's all-time high.

Mr. Gavin, commenting on last month's movement, lauded the Association of American Railroads for providing cars and the "splendid cooperation of most shippers and receivers in speedy loading and unloading of cars."

Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Wetter were given a wedding reception a the Ringbo church on Sunday. A good program was given and a delicious lunch served. The honored couple received many lovely gifts.

Visitors at the Wm. Fluke home Sunday were Mrs. David McKinley David, Jimmy and Paul of Benson, Minn., Mr. and Mrs. H. Heinze of Thief River Falls., Mrs. K. T. Sollom, Norma, Marian, Verna and Elvida.

Good Pasture Practices Add Grazing Days, Boost Herd's Milk Flow and Cut Feed Cost

Well Fertilized Pastures Are Cheapest Source of High Protein Feed.

CHICAGO—It costs only about one-fourth as much to produce milk on good pasture as it costs to feed a dairy herd on grain and hay, according to a statement issued here by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, based on statistics cited recently by G. A. Williams of the Purdue University dairy extension department.

Emphasizing that the difference between good and poor pasture is largely a matter of management, Williams lists these pasture practices that are cutting costs and raising milk flow:

1. Seed high-yielding pasture mixtures that give extra grazing days in spring and fall. A good legume-grass mixture produces more milk than either crop grown separately.
2. Rotate your grazing and avoid overgrazing. For high production, divide your pasture acreage into two or three fields.
3. Add plant nutrients so the soil can feed the legumes and grasses. During a six months' pasture season a cow removes from the soil approximately 115 pounds of nitrogen, 26 pounds of phosphate, 93 pounds of potash, and 37 pounds of lime. Unless these nutrients are returned in the form of plowed-under legumes, commercial fertilizer and barnyard manure, the land becomes too poor to produce good grass.

"Dairymen," said Williams, "are finding it increasingly more profitable to purchase commercial fertilizer to supplement the supply of barnyard manure available than it is to buy high-priced concentrates."

Deep-Rooted Legumes and Grasses Called Tool for Opening Up Poorly Drained Soil

Tight Soil Causes Ponding on Corn Field.

CHICAGO—If your soil doesn't drain well, look to the condition of your soil as well as to your drain tile system, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"The slow down may be caused by damaged soil structure and loss of organic matter," says a statement issued by the committee. "Putting in more drain tile may give you temporary relief. But it is not a permanent solution.

"Many corn belt soils need unclogging. The structure of silt loams, clay loams and clays has been broken down by too many grain crops and too few legume crops. Working wet soils with heavy machinery has made matters worse.

tool for opening this stopped up soil is deep-rooted legumes and grasses in the rotation. The tap-roots of sweet clover and alfalfa well fed with phosphate and potash pierce the compacted soil. Plowed under legume roots and tops build up the organic matter supply. When this organic matter decomposes it gives off compounds that stick soil particles together in loose granules. When your soil is loose and grainy it has good tilth.

"How deep-rooted legumes help improve drainage was shown in Iowa tests. Silt loam that had been in alfalfa three years absorbed 2½ inches of water in the first three hours following a rain. Soil left bare of crops absorbed only about half an inch of rain in this time."

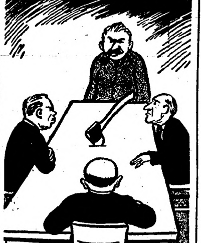
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S.-Russia Events Reach Climax; Moscow Parley Continues Uneasily; Soviets Sever Consular Relations

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Discussion



THE AX WAS THERE

RUSSIANS:

Climactic

Virtually every avenue of public thought in the U. S. was teeming with Russians, shadows of Russians and a few Red convertibles.

There was a feeling, however, that the international commotion had reached its climax and was ready to start subsiding, partly because public interest, flagellated into a state of high excitement, couldn't stand the stress and strain of it all much longer.

Nevertheless, events having to do with Russia remained for the time being, at least, reasonably climactic: The Moscow talks were ready either to pay off or break down; Russia had broken off consular relations with the U. S.; Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the window-jumping Russian schoolteacher, had told the story of how she had been strong-armed.

Moscow

In the Kremlin, where the three western ambassadors were trying to pound out some kind of tentative basis for negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians were playing their familiar game of hit-and-run.

U. S. Ambassador Walter Bedell Smith, British Representative Frank Roberts and French Ambassador Yves Chataigneau had been drudging through a series of meetings with the implacable V. M. Molotov, Soviet foreign minister.

Molotov, as usual, was hard, tough, adamant in his adherence to current Soviet policy on the Berlin and German problems. No progress was made; the three western representatives were dispirited, although they kept to their chore. The word was whispered about that this conference might break up in total failure.

Then came a break, or so it appeared. Premier Stalin would meet again with the three envoys. In the ensuing discussions with Stalin hopes again were raised that the western powers might succeed in at least partially lifting the Berlin blockade and perhaps effect an area of agreement that could be used for a subsequent top-level meeting to iron out some of the major East-West differences.

But there were some who still could see the ax on the peace table. Somehow, there was a fimiliar pattern behind these negotiations that went something like this:

After Molotox had subjected his fellow conferees to hour after hour of his case-hardened refusals to come to terms, attempting by those tactics to wear his diplomatic opponents down, the scene was set for Stalin's return.

Stalin came on with his air of geniality and good will, apparently not only willing but eager to reach common ground. His attitude was so manifestly different from Molotov's that hopes again soared.

There was the danger. Lulled into optimism, the western envoys might be trapped into making concessions that should not be made. This same kind of "Molotov-to-Stalin" play had worked before.

Hit the Road

Jacob H. Lomakin, Soviet consul general in New York, had conducted himself improperly and discreditably in the affair of the Russian schoolteacher, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina, the U. S. state department pointed out as it ordered him out of the country.

It was a sensational turn of events. In a note to the Soviet embassy the state department asserted that Lomakin had, in effect, misled his own government with regard to the Kasenkina case so that the protests which the Soviets made to the U. S. were "based on misinformation."

In addition, the note charged that the consul general had "hindered the investigation of the competent police officials by refusing to allow them to interview Mrs. Kasenkina" while she was under control of the Soviet consul.

Then, even as Lomakin was packing his bags and preparing to leave the country, Russia countered sharply by formally severing consular relations with the U. S. and repeating is accusations of bad faith.

That seemed to prove that Lomakin's actions in the Kasenkina affair were not so much the expression of his individual initiative as they were a direct reflection of Kremlin policy.

However, no one was worrying too much about the breaking off of consular relations. The move did not mean that diplomatic relations were severed.

Soviet consular activities in the U. S. were limited to arranging for mutual trade and travel between the two nations. Since there is practically no trade or travel exchange taking place, the presence or absence of a consul wouldn't make too much difference.

To Escape

Lying weak and ashen-faced in her hospital bed in New York, Mrs. Oksana Kasenkina finally got around to telling the story of why she leaped from the third-story window of the Soviet consulate.

"I jumped to escape, not to kill myself," she said.

She said that her "rescue" from the Tolstoy foundation's Reed farm was not a "rescue but an arrest," engineered by the Russian consul-general.

She did not want to go back to Russia. Although she loves her people, she stated that "I don't agree with the policies of Josef Stalin. I cannot agree with the regime in the Soviet."

VIEWPOINTS:

Religious

It couldn't be called schismatic: It was thoroughly democratic.

In such a way delegates to the first assembly of the World Council of Churches might have assessed the first two addresses which officially opened the historic sessions in Amsterdam.

John Foster Dulles, U. S. lay leader in many religious activities and internationalist-minded statesman, and Czechoslovakia's Joseph L. Hromadka of the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren, speaking in a section discussion on "The Church and International Disorder," between them managed to strip much of the camouflage from the growing philosophical and spiritual rift separating the East and West.

Total result of Dulles' and Hromadka's addresses, taken together, was not to presage a religious split between the two blocs of nations but rather to define the problems at the root of current international disorders for those who are courageous enough to attack them with spiritual weapons instead of guns.

DULLES . . . "Peace can never be stabilized except by institutions that seek to reflect moral law and that respect the dignity of the individual. And the present methods of communism are incompatible with peaceful change.

"Collective action may at times be required, pursuant to the United Nations charter, to protect member states or individual human beings in their charter rights.

"Those who believe in moral law and human dignity must be concerned to make social institutions reflect those ideals."

HROMADKA . . . The world is seeing "the end of western supremacy within the realm of international order.

"Now, three years after World War II, the western man hasn't yet recovered and is losing more and more the last remnants of his world leadership.

He "hasn't much to offer along the lines of moral, philosophical or spiritual leadership."

OUTPUT:

Upshoot

Total national output of goods and services, stimulated by inflationary forces which have been growing stronger since early summer, hit a record-breaking rate of 248.2 billion dollars in the second quarter of the fiscal year, the commerce department has reported.

That figure is 4.4 billion dollars above the peak reached in the first three months of this year, according to the department.

FUEL OIL:

Plentiful

Last winter's serious fuel shortage in homes and industries probably will not be repeated this year, according to present predictions.

The supply of fuel oil is becoming so plentiful that there apparently is no need for an elaborate distribution system to be set up for the purpose of doling it out.

Stored supplies are 60 per cent ahead of last year at this time and crude runs from distilleries are half a million barrels ahead of a year ago. New refining facilities are largely responsible for eradicating the shortage.

Moreover, oil industry officials say, there now is an ample supply of gasoline. Only thing that could put a crimp in that would be a national emergency or a transportation stoppage.

Most of the major cities are well supplied with oil, and while there might be spot shortages in rural communities during the winter they probably would be only of a day or two duration.

"Last winter," said one industry member, "part of the trouble was caused by snow tying up the railroads." That happens and attention is focused on it when there is an oil shortage. It could happen again.

RADAR NET:

Inadequate

What with one thing and another, Americans can't help now and then wondering what would happen if this country suddenly were to be attacked from the air.

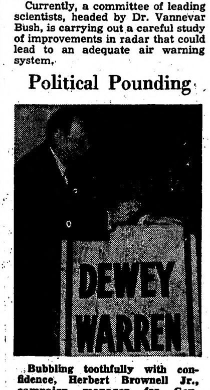
Biggest question in this connection is whether a warning of such an attack would be given in time for the population to evacuate probable centers of attack.

Air force officials say they are doing the best they can with what they have to provide the nation with a radar warning network.

What they have, however, is at best inadequate, they say. The present radar system is not capable of detecting all approaches of foreign planes.

Currently, a committee of leading scientists, headed by Dr. Vannevar Bush, is carrying out a careful study of improvements in radar that could lead to an adequate air warning system.

Political Pounding



Bubbling toothfully with confidence, Herbert Brownell Jr., campaign manager for Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, nails up the sign which proclaims that the Washington, D. C., headquarters for the Republican campaign ticket of Dewey and Warren is open for business. Brownell also has the idea that business will be good.

INSTALLMENTS:

Regulated

Just exactly what effect the newly imposed restrictions on credit buying would have on the hog-wild inflation that has been devastating the nation's moral fiber was not quite clear.

Acting under authorization of the 80th congress, the government put the brakes on installment buying and extended the ceiling on its new regulations to $5,000 to control wildcat buying of expensive new automobiles. This new order goes into effect September 20.

From that day forward the law will require that the buyer of a new car pay one-third down in cash and take not more than 18 months to pay off the balance in installments of not less than $70 a month.

Other hard goods—stoves, refrigerators, washing machines and related household articles—call for a 20 per cent down payment with the balance to be liquidated in not more than 15 months.

The order exempts anything costing less than $50 or more than $5,000—a rule which set many Americans to asking caustically what they could find to buy for less than $50 and where they could get the money to purchase anything over $5,000.

Actually, however, the credit curb seemed to amount to little more than putting the government's stamp of legal approval on a practice which has been followed voluntarily by a considerable number of retail merchants.

Many astute businessmen have been following the one-third down payment rule all along, as a protection both to themselves and the prospective buyers.

Upshot of it all was that few people believed the federal regulation would do much to clear the inflationary atmosphere.

Watch That Credit

Prospective home buyers who might plunge beyond their means simply because down payments are lower under the new housing law have been warned by government housing experts to avoid that trap.

"Our only worry," one expert said, "is that the lower down payments will encourage people to buy homes they can't afford. When you reduce the down payment, the monthly payments are more."

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger-miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,186, a reduction of 176 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 48,780 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or 66.2 per cent under 1946.

PAID ADVERTISEMENT—Prepared for Luther W. Youngdahl, Minneapolis, by Youngdahl for Governor Volunteer Committee, Donald M. Dickey, Wayzata, Chairman, for which regular rates have been paid.

Champion of the Youth . . .

LUTHER W. YOUNGDAHL
Governor of Minnesota, Candidate for Republican Nomination and Re-Election

All who have heard Governor Youngdahl speak know him above all as the champion of the youth. All over Minnesota, his pleas for better opportunities for boys and girls have stirred audiences. "The people went away from his meeting," one editor reported, "feeling they had had a revelation." He was almost mobbed at another meeting by the eager young people who crowded around him at the close of his meeting . . . "a tribute to a man who had captured their imagination and inspired them with dreams of a better land in which to live and work."

"Our youth are our most precious asset," he says.

Plan Conserves Youth

He obtained passage of an act providing for a Youth Conservation Commission, which now is directing the treatment of youthful offenders along lines that will best promote their rehabilitation and which is stimulating the organization of constructive activities to prevent boys and girls getting into trouble.

People Supported Him

All Minnesota recalls the successful fight he made to rid the state of slot machines. Operation of slot machines and other forms of gambling are a menace to the welfare of youth, he insisted. "Our great hope for the future," he said, "is to have boys and girls who are strong and reliant and have respect for law and government and the ideals upon which these institutions must rest. What can we expect of them if officials wink at the law?" He asked for passage of a law which would enable the law enforcement officers to rid the state of this illegal traffic. Men who profited from slot machines tried to block the legislation, but parents rose in such mass support of Governor Youngdahl that he swept all obstacles aside. "God bless you for trying to make Minnesota a cleaner and better place in which to bring up our children," parents wrote. One poll showed that 72% of the people, 81% in farm communities, approved of his program.

More Aid for Schools

He led in the fight for improvement of state school aid distribution and more ample school support, which, among other gains, increased state aid to local schools $11,000,000 a year. He recognized the plight of persons depending on old age assistance and aid to dependent children and obtained increases in their allowances. He championed a bill provided state aid for county public health nurses. He has undertaken far-reaching plans to improve care of the mentally ill. In many lines, he has improved the state's services.

All who want to continue the high character of state government Minnesota has enjoyed under Governor Youngdahl must go to the polls September 14th and vote for his renomination. Men who want to profit from slot machines, gambling and lax enforcement of the laws will do everything in their power to prevent his re-election. The people who want a decent environment in which to live and rear their children must furnish the votes to re-elect Governor Youngdahl and continue his fine work.

EDUCATORS SUPPORT GOVERNOR YOUNGDAHL

Indicative of the widespread support Governor Youngdahl is receiving, seven of Minnesota's leading educators in a recent broadcast praised the Governor's efforts in behalf of youth and asked for his re-election. Included were:

Dr. Charles Nelson Pace, president emeritus, Hamline University.

Dr. Edgar Carlson, president of Gustavus Adolphus College.

Dr. Merrill E. Jarchow, dean of men, Carleton College.

Dr. Clemens M. Granskou, president, St. Olaf College.

Prof. G. W. C. Ross, chairman, department of political science, St. Thomas College.

Dr. Charles J. Turck, president, Macalester College

Dr. J. O. Christianson, superintendent, School of Agriculture, University of Minnesota.

Typical of the position taken by the educators was the statement made by President Granskou of St. Olaf College:

"Once in a while we come across a man in public life whose public utterances and performance in office are of such high order that he truly can be classified as a candidate of the people rather than a representative of a particular party. Governor Youngdahl is a man of this caliber. . . . His pronouncements on political and moral questions are the convictions of a man of character. . . . He has demonstrated that he is not afraid to take risks for what he believes to be the right course of action and whose words and deeds thus command our respect, our loyalty and our continued support."

President Carlson of Gustavus Adolphus College said:

"We must be grateful for the inspiring leadership of our Governor and his comprehensive and forward-looking program of human welfare for the state of Minnesota. That gratitude we will express by returning him to office with a record-breaking endorsement of his leadership and his program."

Bees that sting less, gather more honey and resist disease soon will be available as a result of new discoveries in breeding. Applying methods used in artificially breeding dairy cows and in producing hybrid corn, scientists have found ways to control queen mating. Thereby they are working to produce superior honey-makers—bees not so anxious to sting, and willing to work harder. They will also produce better pollinizers and bees more resistant to foulbrood.

Man Is Riding Life Cycle Toward His Destruction

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Today we have two visitors whom I met recently at the Smithsonian institution, Mrs. Neanderthaler (her husband wasn't available) and Mr. Cro-Magnon.

They have come a long way. The Neanderthalers lived about 25,000 years ago—but what's a few thousand years among friends—or relatives? I doubt that the Neanderthalers are relatives of ours—and I'm not sorry.

They lived early in the Old Stone age, and died without leaving any known heirs, assigns or descendents—which may be just as well for the rest of us who might have inherited some of their characteristics. They were sub-humans—stocky folks—but they couldn't take it. They died out.

Now Mr. Cro-Magnon was a different proposition. He was a superior human and I wish he were a relative because he was really superior to us—better body, better brain. If he'd only lasted, what a career he would have had in Hollywood—and what he might have done for us! He might have saved us. He may still.

Baukhage

I've been reading two new books—"Our Plundered Planet," by Fairfield Osborne and "Road to Survival," by William Vogt.

Our friend Neanderthaler probably managed to stick around 200,000 years or so before his environment or his neighbors finished him off.

Today we are rapidly changing our environment, and unless we cease destroying our sources of food and shelter, we shall soon destroy ourselves, as our sub-human friend was destroyed.

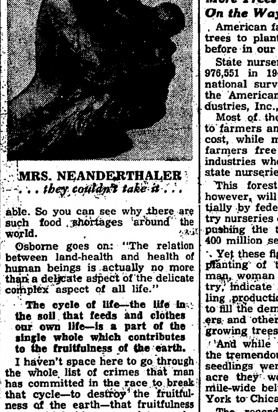
We know that there are two things which chiefly distinguish man from the animal: The way he has developed the use of his hands and the way his brain works. But our hands, at the levers of machines, conceived by our brains, have so disturbed the cycle of nature, have done such terrible things to all forms of life, that they may prove our undoing—if they don't blow us into atomic eternity, first!

Forgetting atomic destruction, let's look at some others.

We are very good at reproducing. In three centuries the population of the earth has increased almost five times. In the seventeenth century there were 400 million people. There are 2,000 million today. Five times as many mouths to feed.

Osborne says: "If one takes four billion acres, representing an area of land estimated as now available for cultivation, it means that there are less than two acres per capita. Contrasted with this is a generally accepted computation that two and one-half acres of land of average productivity are required to provide even a minimum adequate diet for each person."

Think of that: It takes two and one-half acres to feed you properly. There are now only two acres available. So you can see why there are such food shortages around the world.



MRS. NEANDERTHALER
. . . they couldn't take it . . .

Osborne goes on: "The relation between land-health and health of human beings is actually no more than a delicate aspect of the delicate complex aspect of all life."

The cycle of life—the life in the soil that feeds and clothes our own life—is a part of the single whole which contributes to the fruitfulness of the earth.

I haven't space here to go through the whole list of crimes that man has committed in the race to break that cycle—to destroy the fruitfulness of the earth—that fruitfulness upon which his own existence depends. Take the most striking example—the topsoil.

Topsoil. When that goes, we go with it.

Osborne, as I mentioned in this space last week, estimates the average depth of the topsoil on the earth is about one foot. It is estimated that it takes nature, under favorable conditions, from 300 to 1,000 years to build one inch of that vital source of our food, clothing and shelter.

"Yet," he says, "what may have taken a thousand years to build can be, and in some places has been, removed by erosion in a year, or even in a single day."

Erosion. That comes from overuse, wrong use or removal of protecting grasses and trees. We overgrazed the plains to get quick money for beef, mutton and wool. We plowed fields of grass, left them exposed, and you remember what happened—the dust bowl. We slaughtered the forests and reaped the yearly devastating floods. Today our food and shelter runs down the muddied rivers to be lost in the ocean.

And animal life? We killed off millions of wild animals on this continent. We replaced them, to some extent, by domestic animals. But we are breaking the magic cycle of life there, too, for the life-giving properties of most of our domestic animals do not return to the soil as did the bones and bodies of wild life that lived their course, died and were enveloped in their mother earth.

Sheep and cattle are shipped today to slaughter houses where what little is left disappears in disposal plants or goes back to the ocean.

. . . spark of something else . . .

We are killing the soil. Gradually removing it and the tiny animal and plant cells it contains, and thus destroying the potential for reproducing the tiny living organisms in the top soil which are a part of the relationship of all living things.

I haven't space to go on, but I don't want to leave on a too-depressing note. It's true that our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Neanderthaler, the sub-human folk with the little brain, couldn't take it. But we can hope that his successor, Mr. Cro-Magnon, who had a better brain than we have, passed some of it on to us, with the spark of something else that made him lift his chin a little from the clod.

"We have been taught to lift ours higher, to the heavens. There's hope up there—and inspiration—and within ourselves the power, too, if we know how to use it.

More Trees On the Way

American farmers will have more trees to plant next year than ever before in our history.

State nurseries plan to grow 368,976,551 in 1947-48, according to a national survey just completed by the American Forest Products Industries, Inc., of Washington, D. C.

Most of these trees will be sold to farmers and other landowners at cost, while many will be given to farmers free of charge by forest industries who purchase them from state nurseries.

This forest seedling production, however, will be increased substantially by federal and private industry nurseries over the United States, pushing the total to approximately 400 million seedlings.

Yet these figures, representing the planting of three trees for every man, woman and child in the country, indicate statistically that seedling production still is not enough to fill the demand by woodland owners and other citizens interested in growing trees.

And while they still do not meet the tremendous demand, if all these seedlings were planted 1,000 to an acre they would form a verdant, mile-wide belt stretching from New York to Chicago.

The record in tree planting is matched only by the volume of new wood now growing on America's forest lands. Total growth now exceeds 13.3 billion cubic feet of wood every year—greatest volume ever recorded in surveys made by the federal government.

Mabel B. Hanson, Editor and Publisher

Subscription Price: $1.50; Canada and Foreign: $2.00.

Sept. 10. 1948

October 1st the subscription to the Holt Weekly News will have to be raised to $2.00 per year. We have tried to do our bit by keeping it at the pre-inflation price but now find it necessary to make this slight raise due to rising costs in everything. At $2.00 it is still less than 4c an issue. We feel confident that every subscriber we have can absorb that amount without noticing it and to us it will mean a great deal. So many have not felt right about paying the old price and have asked if we will soon increase it. To these "moral builders" a sincere thanks.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

One Great American Trait

I always think it does a newspaper editor good to get out from behind his desk and see how folks in other parts of America look, and think, and act.

And that's what I've been doing these past weeks, touring the country from Michigan to Texas, California to Maine. It's a mighty encouraging experience. Not only because of the different points of view you run into—but because of the tolerance which reconciles those different points of view.

I mean the tolerance of a Pennsylvania farmer for the habits of his city cousin; the tolerance of folks who vote one way towards those who vote another; the tolerance of those who prefer spring water towards those who enjoy a moderate beverage like beer.

From where I sit, it's that great American trait of tolerance—respect for individual tastes and liberties—that makes this country strong. Let's never lose it!

School Days Are Here Again

Guard precious eyes by providing good lighting. Here are a few simple suggestions:

1. Use the right size bulbs to give enough light for the visual task.
2. Avoid glare by shading bare bulbs - - glare is harmful to the eye.
3. Clean reflector bowls and fixtures - - dust and dirt cut down light output.
4. Light walls and ceilings reflect more light - - paint up.

Good lighting is not a cure-all, but . . it is the cheapest insurance against eyestrain, which can cause SO much trouble.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period, collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The paralled in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

Academy of Science Memberships

Membership in the great national academies of science such as the U. S. National Academy and the Royal Society of London involves paying a subscription; on the other hand, the acadamy of sciences of the USSR in Moscow pays its academicians 5,000 roubles a month, awards them liberal rations of food and clothing, gives them discount in ordinary shops and allows them to buy in special stores, awards them cars, and entitles them to comfortable city apartments.

Beginning of Sweden

Tradition tells us that the kingdom of Sweden was founded between 600 and 650 A. D., by a union of the country's two most powerful tribes: the Svear (Swedes) and the Gotar (Goths). It is not known how this union was brought about, but it is known that the Goths, although obliged to recognize the Swedish king as their own, were allowed to keep their land and local self-government.

Cottage Cheese

A half-cup of cottage cheese is more than equal in protein content to a generous serving of beef or pork. It is about the cheapest of the high quality protein foods. Valuable proteins may be obtained from vegetables, cereals and breads, but animal proteins are superior. Therefore, cottage cheese may be used to replace grain products and save grain for foreign shipment.

Painting Pointers

First coat of paint is called the primer—like a petticoat for the dresscoat. A dull-finish primer is necessary under enamels. If painting an enameled piece, use an undercoat before re-enameling. For wood with knots or stained finish, use an aluminum paint primer to keep the resin or old color from bleeding through. When the primer is dry, rub smooth with sandpaper.

"Children's Charter"

Britain has received her first "children's charter"—a 10-point list of do's and don'ts for parents drawn up by 228 average boys and girls aged between eight and 12. The do's and don'ts were prepared from a poll that included children from an expensive preparatory school, a private middle class school and a London county council school.

Care of Fleeces

Wool is the source of one-third of the income of sheep. Correct fleece care, then, means more money for the flock owner. In shearing wool keep it dry, and keep fleeces clean. Separate tags and wet covered locks from the fleece. Tie fleeces individually with wool twine. All fleeces, such as black, burry or dead wool should be sorted and packed separately.

Grass for Chicks

Providing grass range for chicks is one of the best management practices used by successful poultrymen. Good, clean grass range not only reduces the feed cost 10 to 20 per cent, but also reduces the danger from disease. Birds do not care for tall or dry grass. It has little food value and chickens do not like it.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

South Receives Wallace With Fury; CIO Pledges to Support President; Berlin Meetings May End Stalemate

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

WALLACE:
Pure Hate

Henry Wallace claimed that his expansive love for his fellow men had not been diminished by his experiences in the South, but it stood as a fact that the ramparts of that abiding affection must have undergone a severe test.

As the Progressive party's presidential candidate Wallace had gallantly penetrated into the southern states to bring them his brand of enlightenment.

But the crusader was not appreciated. He was received in North Carolina by hostile audiences who showered him with invective, vilification, eggs and tomatoes.

His speeches were blanked out by boos and catcalls in Winston-Salem, Durham, Burlington, Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C. Wallace was stunned with unbelief at what was happening to him.

In Burlington, where the full force of North Carolina's vituperative mood was unleashed, the former vice president was not even given a chance to talk. He was unable to do anything except dodge missiles and plead with the furious citizens closest to him that things like this were not supposed to happen in the United States.

It was an ugly display of bad taste that spread hysterically from town to town as Wallace's tour progressed. The egg and tomato tossing was severely criticized by top U. S. officials, including President Truman who called it "highly un-American business," and said:

"Mr. Wallace is entitled to say his piece the same as any other American."

Nevertheless, in North Carolina Wallace's say was confined for the most part to protestations against the treatment he was receiving. At Greensboro, with egg shell clinging to his head, he shouted:

"I don't mind being hit by eggs and tomatoes, but they would be more useful being fed to children.

"The faces I have seen distorted by hatred are of people for whom I have in my heart profound compassion, because most of them have not enough to eat."

The crowd laughed at him.

And as Wallace left North Carolina to head into Alabama and Mississippi it looked as though he might be able to use some "profound compassion" for himself, for his racial views are opposed even more violently in those states.

BACKING:
For Truman

As the two major presidential candidates prepared to swing their campaigns into full career in preparation for the November elections, some good news popped up for President Truman.

The CIO officially threw its support to the Democratic ticket and pledged the organization to work for his election.

That was the way the CIO had written itself on the political books this year, but the action left the organization simmering with internal discord.

Bitter protests of 12 left-wing union leaders had had to be overcome before the CIO could cast its lot with Truman and Barkley. The dissenting unions wanted to support Wallace, and they had their way insofar as the resolution adopted by the group was easy in its criticism of the Progressive party's candidate.

GOP nominee Thomas E. Dewey, however, was condemned as "the candidate of big business." The Dixiecrats, headed by Gov. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, were shrugged off in the resolution as a coalition of Democrats and "do-nothing Republicans" that has "steadfastly adhered to the philosophy of the National Association of Manufacturers."

The pro-Truman resolution by the CIO executive board did not necessarily mean total support for the President, however. Philip Murray, CIO president, said that the 12 dissenting unions are not bound by the majority decision to back Mr. Truman.

"Any union still may exercise its right to do what it wants," he said.

That meant, apparently, that the leadership of at least 12 CIO unions, numbering more than a million members, would continue to labor in behalf of Wallace, while 30 other unions with about 5.5 million members would go to work for the Democratic party.

Crowd Fury

Henry Wallace, Progressive party candidate for President, has discovered that the penalty for espousing political ideas that differ sharply from the majority opinion is hatred. Speaking at Greensboro, N. C., he was pelted with eggs and vegetables—which probably is just another form of freedom of expression.

BERLIN:
Some Talk

That sound of sabers rattling in Berlin meant this time that the disputants in the fight over control of the German capital were merely laying down their swords to get together and talk about it once more.

Tension lifted almost visibly when the Big Four military governors of Germany met for the first time in more than five months to discuss a single currency for Berlin and the lifting of the Soviet blockade of the city.

The meeting was called in the first place to implement decisions reached by the American, British and French ambassadors with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow. At least the Moscow talks had accomplished that much.

Topping the list of items for discussion was the problem of what to do about the rival currencies in Berlin. At present both eastern and western zone marks are circulating in the city.

It was understood that the conferees in Moscow previously had agreed in principle that only the Soviet zone mark should circulate in Berlin, but that it should be under four-power control.

There were still conflicting attitudes as to what course the Berlin parley should take, however.

The Russians believed that an agreement on getting a single currency must be worked out before any final East-West agreement on Berlin can be possible.

In Washington the U. S. state department, backed by Great Britain and France, was insisting that the Soviets must lift the Berlin blockade before any discussion of the currency problem is held.

The whole situation was extremely complex and, actually, few persons outside of high official circles made any pretense of being able to understand it fully.

About as far as general understanding of the subject went, it was limited to the realization that unless an agreement were reached soon the tortured peace would become more dangerously strained.

Headliners

IN GARLAND, TEX. . . . A campaign-minded hatmaker was offering edible candy headgear (above) for reckless election bettors who vow to eat their hats if their candidate loses.

IN ROCHESTER, N. H. . . . Raymond Beaulieu, fined $73 in municipal court for operating an unregistered automobile, sold his car to raise money to pay the fine.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS. . . . Robert H. Smith was granted a divorce when he testified that his wife, enraged because he didn't know how to dance the polka, slapped and kicked him until his weight dropped from 165 pounds to 140.

NO RELIEF TOMORROW

High Cost of Living Stays and Stays

Here's that same old news again: There is no immediate relief from the high cost of living in sight, and it probably will continue to creep upwards throughout the election campaign this fall.

Economists of the labor, commerce and agriculture departments concur in the prediction that no break in prices is likely to come about before the November 2 election. Their statements indicate that the next President will have to face the high cost of living issue right off the bat.

Even in food prices, where record crop forecasts have jolted prices a little, no immediate relief is in prospect for the family budget. Food costs, as a matter of fact, will be higher at least until the end of the year.

Athlete's Foot Common

Half of the American people are infected with athlete's foot. Most individuals, especially adults, have had athlete's foot infection a number of times. The disease is usually more irritating than dangerous. It is produced from the spores, or seeds, of a certain fungus and as such, spreads rapidly, especially in damp, dark places. The fungi causing the disease are usually found in three places: locker rooms, shower rooms and dressing rooms; shoes, garters, fabric equipment and towels and on the human body.

Spy Inquiry Should Not Ask Rejection of U. S. Constitution

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—When a man has a strong constitution he doesn't have to think much about it.

It works about the same with a nation. Especially when both are young and vigorous. But as they get more mature, they may discover a few organs here and there which have to be mended or a few articles that have to be amended just because of a changing environment.

In any case it isn't a good idea to lock your constitution up and never take it out and dust it off and see if it is still there.

Baukhage

This is the month when what Ben Franklin referred to as "the grand Federal Constitution" was born in Philadelphia after more than four months debate by the constitutional convention. It was signed Monday, September 17, 1787. George Washington presided over the convention and presided as well as he had as head of the ragged Continentals. When the document was engrossed it was signed by all but Gov. Edmund Randolph and Col. George Mason of Virginia and Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts.

"The business being thus closed," as Washington wrote in his diary, "the members adjourned to the City Tavern, dined together and took a cordial leave of each other . . ."

Many people at the time thought the Constitution was pretty good as it was, and yet the part which is probably most familiar to the present generation is the part which our founding fathers recognized as the first thing lacking in the original draft—the first amendment:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

This amendment and the nine which followed, making up the Bill of Rights, were all introduced in the first congress, as the Beards in their "Basic History of the United States" put it, "in response to a popular demand" but involving "no alteration in the form of government." Congress passed the Bill of Rights on to the states, which, in convention, ratified them in 1791.

Establishment of these fundamental rights, says Carl Van Doren in "The Great Rehearsal," may be regarded as the "contribution of the people" to the Constitution. They represent the crystallization of those desires for human dignity in the souls of civilized men—desires which reveal his innate possession of a spirituality that differentiates him from the beasts.

The maintenance of those rights, as opposed to the attainment and safeguarding of purely material possessions, has brought about the clash of ideologies which threatens a crisis in the world today.

Spy Probe Presses Point

During the spy-ring investigations by the house un-American activities committee, there was much talk about the violation of the Bill of Rights. The President himself, when asked a categorical question on that subject, said he believed that this committee had, in the course of its hearings, infringed these rights. He did not specify which of the rights had been infringed but from his previous expressions it would seem he was referring to the fifth amendment which says in part:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury. . . ."

The President said some of the testimony made public had done irreparable harm to certain persons, had slandered a lot of people who didn't deserve it.

He explained that all the evidence of alleged guilt concerning these persons had already been presented to the grand jury and that the grand jury had not considered it sufficient grounds for indictment. The jury, protecting the rights of the individual, had not made the names public. But the un-American activities committee, presenting the same evidence, had made the names public and in so doing had, according to the implication of the President, infringed the Bill of Rights.

From the mail I get and the telephone calls I receive, I know that many people disagree with the criticisms of the committee, fully approving of its actions.

These people, I am sure, do not believe in the infringement of anyone's constitutional rights. They believe in the American legal principle that a person is innocent until he is proved guilty. But they appear to have convicted the accused in their own minds, feel they are guilty, and also have the feeling that anyone who objects to what the committee has done is guilty of taking sides with a traitorous person and, therefore, is himself indirectly guilty of treason.

Before me I have a letter. It is written in good English, emotional it is true, but obviously from an intelligent and educated person. It says in part:

"Why not be fair in your broadcasts? It is scandalous and near criminal to murder a man's reputation on mere suspicion as is being done by certain committees investigating communism..."

So far so good. With that start I expected a strong defense of the Bill of Rights to follow. But no indeed! Listen to this "but"—

"You know perfectly well the necessity of the publicity against communism because there is no other way to arouse the electorate. You know there are Benedict Arnolds by the score in the administration's set up."

Wait a minute! Is it necessary to violate the Constitution to arouse the electorate? If you believe that, you believe in revolution. It's revolution if you do not use legal means in exercising your right to change the Constitution. But do you want to change the Constitution so the Bill of Rights is infringed? Not if you really mean what you say in the first paragraph of your letter.

Who's Selling U. S. Down the River?

As to whether there are "Benedict Arnolds" in the government, I have no doubt there may be foreign spies in the government, and I would be in favor of dealing with them much more drastically than persent laws permit. I hope stronger laws will be drafted. So does congress. The department of justice has been working on such a law for some time. But to say the government is full of traitors is either utter nonsense or else the FBI is a lot of morons. Now let's read further from my listener's letter:

"Canada has officials in their government who are loyal to the country and cleared out the rats on their own initiative. We have men who are selling us down the river night and day."

Well, as to Canada, no one was publicly accused until the court had decided there was legal proof of his guilt. The names of those who had been accused and declared innocent never were revealed.

As to men "selling us down the river night and day," I will take the word of General Eisenhower if, in a political year the President's word can't be taken. The general said: "This country keeps its major secrets pretty well."

Now the writer of this letter is obviously sincere, believes, according to his own word, in the fifth amendment, on both legal and moral grounds. Yet on the same page, speaking with natural but illogical indignation he asks that the Bill of Rights be abrogated.

I understand this psychologically. I have found myself privately convicting at least one of the persons who was accused by a witness before the un-American activities committee although I know that investigation by the FBI and hearings by the grand jury failed to find this person guilty. Perhaps more evidence will be introduced with which the accused can be convicted under the law, but as long as we pretend to be loyal Americans, we have to hold our tempers and withhold our judgments.

Perhaps before forming opinions on this subject, certainly before expressing them, instead of just counting 10, it might be well to count the 10 amendments composing the Bill of Rights and while counting, read them over carefully.

And maybe, as a birthday present to the Constitution which has given us the best government we know about, read the rest of the document over, too. If enough people did that, there might be a happier birthday all around.

Life of Samuel Colt

After being expelled from Amherst, Samuel Colt was sent to sea. The ship's paddle wheel gave him an idea for the revolving pistol cylinder. At the age of 14 he whittled out a model and it worked. Later, he quit his father's dye plant to seek his fortune as "Dr. Coult". In 1832 he sent his plan of a gun to the U. S. patent office, and was awarded a patent in 1836. After the original company failed, Colt invented the submarine "mine", while still in his twenties. He died wealthy at the age of 48.

October 1st the subscription to the Holt Weekly News will have to be raised to $2.00 per year. We have tried to do our bit by keeping it at the pre inflation price but now find it necessary to make this slight raise due to rising costs in everything. At $2.00 it is still less than 4c an issue.

We feel confident that every subscriber we have can absorb that amount without noticing it and to us it will mean a great deal. So many have not felt right about paying the old price and have asked if we will soon increase it. To these "moral builders" a sincere thanks.

The Spaniards described a city of 40,000, although this figure undoubtedly included rather widespread suburbs.

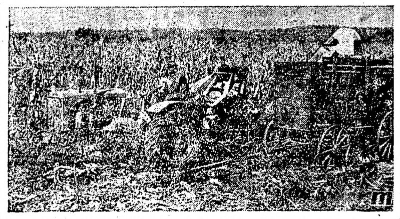
Boosting Soil Management Methods Cut Production Costs, Raise Profit Margin



More Bushels Per Acre Mean Lower Production Costs.

CHICAGO — Higher production costs now biting deeper into farm profits, emphasize the need for farmers to get their land in shape to produce more bushels at lower unit costs per acre, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Cost of production has caught up with farm prices and any downward trend will hit farm prices first," the statement says.

The committee declares that "greater crop producing efficiency is the answer to lower farm prices and soaring production costs."

"The factor that governs profits is the margin between what you get for your crops and what it costs you to produce them," the statement says.

"You can widen that margin and increase your profits by good soil management practices.

"That means using—every possible means of building and maintaining soil fertility. It includes 'put-back' steps and 'holding' operations. Vital among the 'put-back' steps is rebuilding the soil organic matter by growing deep-rooted legumes and grasses in the rotation and feeding them generously with nitrogen and potash as needed. The roots of alfalfa and sweet clover will pry open tight soils. The organic matter added by roots and tops will repair broken-down soil structure. You can add to the organic matter by saving all barnyard manure and putting it back on the soil, and plowing under corn stalks, straw and other crop left-overs.

"Your 'holding' operations can include contouring, grass waterways and terracing if necessary. These will save moisture, topsoil and plant nutrients."

Raise Livestock, Brandt advices

With world shortages of grain rapidly being overcome, agriculture is now approaching the time when good farm management dictates a policy of return to dairy and livestock production, John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes Creameries Inc., said today.

Farmers are now realizing with this year's crop going to market, that the "honeymoon" is over and that 1948 presents some problems of grain surpluses that will have to be dealt with he said.

"As the picture unfolds" Mr. Brandt declared, "the business of dairying as compared with grain farming, from the standpoint of both farm income and soil fertility, is again well on its way to becoming a stabilizing factor in farm operations."

Mr. Brandt pointed out that it will probably take five years before the deficiency in dairy production has any chance of being overtaken. He said that cheaper feed costs and favorable prices for dairy products will encourage greater feeding of grain to cattle and that this will influence production per cow and cushion the decline in cow numbers to some extent.

He said, however: that in some states cow numbers have been reduced as much as 35 per cent from peak years.

In planning their operations, Mr. Brandt said, farmers must be in a position to meet reverses that are bound to come in the production of grains where the hazards of crop failures are far greater than the risk existing on a balanced farm where dairy and livestock production fit into a wise program of diversification.

Mrs. R. F. Smith is spending this week at the Rodney Wetterlund home at Kennedy.

Mrs. P. A. Risberg and Mrs. J. Hagberg returned here Satur- from a weeks visit at Alvarado and Grand Forks.

Mrs. Mabel Sanoden and son Russell of Mentor visited here Thursday. Russell will be a senior at Concordia College, Moorhead, this year.

Mrs. Arnold Myers and children of Fort Worden, Wash., arrived here Sunday for a visit.

Nations Make Choices

As drastic and as devastating as war is, I am confident that the economic troubles of many European countries are not traceable entirely to the aggravations of war. Famines, wars, oppressions: these are symptoms, not causes. Certain nations, like Switzerland, fare surprisingly well amidst the decay and chaos so common in Europe. Little Switzerland is not hollering for help. She is a free enterprise country.

Of course, Switzerland was not a belligerent, and hence was spared some spoilage of war. But now comes news that Belgium is prospering. What is the reason? Belgium chose a free economic system at the close of the war, when she might have taken some foolish panacea. This little country rightly chose a system of free enterprise and economic freedom as the system most likely to bring recovery.

A Practical Way

A reasonable degree of freedom is enjoyed by the Belgium people. Reports have it that the standard of living there is well up toward prewar levels. Newspaper reports have called attention to Belgium's airline, Sabena, which reported its net profit for the year at $2,800,000. This has happened despite the fact it started out with practically nothing after the war. The airline had lost most of its equipment, and had to get help from the government to go ahead.

This is high contrast to what is happening to British airlines. Owned entirely by the socialist government and operated by them, the British airlines find difficulty in keeping their losses down to that figure. The difference is that Britain blundered in choosing, and Belgium chose wisely. Surely the European neighbors of Belgium will notice her good example. Planned economy sometimes looks good on paper, but it is free economy that permits people to use their initiative and work out their own salvation.

Matter of Teamwork

I am not at all surprised to hear these things about Belgium. I was there in the summer of 1946. One very remarkable thing impressed me. And in this there is a lesson for our own people: labor was at that time cooperating in Belgium with the management of industry and with government, in keeping prices down. America has not achieved that much teamwork, and we need it. Dangers still threaten in the battle against inflation.

In Belgium, labor leaders were saying that it was necessary to increase production and thereby bring down prices rather than put up wages and keep prices high. They reasoned that in the long run this would be the best for labor. It is not surprising that their standard of living is reported good by those who have recently toured the country.

Freedom Wins

As a result of that policy, and because she kept her private ownership and private management of industry, Belgium has come back more rapidly than other European countries that were hit by war. This experience is only another link in the strong chain of evidence that free men working in a free economy are happier and better off than they could ever be under some kind of totalitarian government—any kind. Choosing freedom of enterprise, Belgium has shown wisdom.

Johnson has been ill and unable to work for many years and the families will take the old barn down and put up a smaller one.

Climate of Jericho

Lying 800 feet and more below Mediterranean level, the garden acres of Jericho extend toward the Dead sea, lowest surface level on earth. In summer Jericho is torrid, and waves of heat make the desolate white marl hills seem to dance a witch's waltz. In winter, when Jerusalem lies frozen under a blanket of snow, Jericho, near by and far below, is a sunshine paradise.

Railroad Scrap

Railroads turned back to the iron and steel industry more than a ton of scrap metal for every two tons of iron and steel they bought during the past four years. This amount of scrap, an essential material in steel production, is enough to produce all the steel furnished to the railroads.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Nicest Compliment I've Had

One of the nicest comments I've received about this column was from an editor in the Middle West I called on. And while I don't like to give myself orchids, I think it illustrates a point.

"Joe," he said, "it so happens I don't agree with everything you say, but I always like to run your column. Because it gets down to earth and talks about the right to disagree. And it only asks for tolerance towards the other person's point of view."

He went on to explain, by way of illustration, that he never had happened to have a taste for ale or beer. But that when I spoke of the right to enjoy a moderate beverage like beer, well, he was right there with me!

And from where I sit, that's the important thing: not whether you share another person's tastes or point of view—but whether you recognize his right to exercise a free choice in a free land.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period, collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The paralled in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

Business men and Farmers, who successfully survive recessions and depressions are those who meet it with a small proportion of indebtedness.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

1948 Election Campaign Hits Stride As Democrats, GOP Vie for Labor; Soviets Aggravate Berlin Situation

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

THE GOLDEN KEY . . . Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the United Nations, beams as he accepts from former French Premier Robert Schuman a golden key as a symbol of France's temporary surrender of sovereignty over the Palais de Chaillot, where the U. N. general assembly opened on September 21. What treasures of peace that key might unlock this year is a question that gives pause to the entire world.

CAMPAIGN:
Trumpets Sounded

Politicians cleared their throats as with the sound of trumpets, and the 1948 presidential election campaign swept into motion.

The first skirmish between Democrats and Republicans featured President Truman and Harold E. Stassen, who carried the word of their respective parties into the great industrial area around Detroit.

THAT INDICATED that, for the time being at least, the pivotal factor directing the policies of both GOP and Democratic campaigns would be the labor vote.

To win the election this November Mr. Truman probably will need the same proportionate amount of the labor vote that turned out in favor of Roosevelt in the 1932, 1936 and 1940 campaigns. Whether he will get it is very much open to question at this stage.

Truman

Launching his battle for re-election in the Detroit area over the Labor Day week-end, President Truman fired at will.

AT GRAND RAPIDS, Lansing, Detroit, Pontiac and Flint he exhorted all the "little people" of the U. S. to register and vote in the November 2 election.

If a heavy vote turns out, he insisted, not only will he be re-elected, but the Republican majority in congress will be replaced by a Democratic one.

"IF YOU STAY home next November and keep these reactionaries in power, you will deserve every blow you get and you can expect a barrage of body blows," said Mr. Truman. This was a repetition of an idea—that "you'll get what you deserve"—which he had expressed earlier in the year and which, at the time, was received with some animosity by the people to whom he addressed it.

"You can elect a reactionary administration and go into an era of fear, or you can elect a congress and an administration that stand ready to play fair with every element of American life and enter an era of new hope. We're in a hard, tough fight against shrewd, rich opponents. They don't count on your vote; they just don't want you to vote."

Judging from his Labor Day speeches, President Truman is planning to shape his campaign around these contentions:

1. THAT THE MAIN issue boils down to Republican special privileges as against Democratic concern for the little man.
2. THAT THE "DO-NOTHING 80th congress, under GOP control, has done nothing to justify its re-election.
3. THAT ANYTHING EXCEPT an all-out vote by labor on election day "would be a betrayal by labor of its own interests."
4. THAT IF THE MASS of the nation's voters go to the polls on election day a Democratic victory is assured.

Stassen

Just a step and a half behind Mr. Truman came Harold E. Stassen, striving valiantly to scatter the coals of the bonfire the President had kindled in Detroit.

Apparently blessed by Thomas E. Dewey, GOP presidential candidate, Stassen's speech in the motor city was billed as the official kickoff of the Republican campaign.

STASSEN SPARED no words in taking President Truman to task, referring to him as a "complaining" failure who had resorted to "demagogic appeals" in seeking re-election.

Specifically, he charged that Mr. Truman had "dishonored labor with an extreme demagogic appeal to set class against class."

In thus resorting to the time-honored political device of attacking and reproaching the opponent from a personal standpoint, Stassen had gone Mr. Truman one better. In his Detroit addresses the President did not even mention Thomas Dewey.

THE DEFEATED GOP aspirant for the party's nomination declared that Mr. Truman had come not to laud labor for its record, but "as a complaining candidate for election seeking labor's vote."

"His scolding, threatening, complaining speeches" indicated that he lacks the leadership "in affairs at home and abroad so vitally needed in these next crucial years," said Stassen.

"He failed when he had a Democratic congress to work with.

"He failed when he had a Republican congress to work with."

TURNING TO THE political football which the election year has made of the issue of Communist activities in the U. S., Stassen asserted that the Republican party is "driving the red herring out of the official waters of the Potomac" by means of congressional inquiries into the Communist problem.

"Too many red herrings have been in Washington for too long a time," he blasted. "The President should help man the red herring nets instead of complaining against the fishermen."

BERLIN:
More Trouble

There was, it appeared, no end to the Russian-sponsored trouble in Berlin, and it was having its grimly detrimental effect on the fiber of the peace.

Latest incident piled atop many other instances of petty Soviet encroachments, needed little more than a small flame to turn into a funeral pyre for what is left of world harmony.

IT WAS A FLAGRANT invasion of American offices in the Berlin city hall by armed Russian-controlled police who kidnapped 19 western sector policemen who had sought sanctuary in the building.

What the purpose of the raid was never became quite clear. On the surface it looked like pure terrorization carried out as part of the overall Soviet plan eventually to get control of the entire German capital.

AN AMERICAN protest by Col. Frank Howley, American commandant in Berlin, was rejected bluntly by the Soviet commander, Maj. Gen. Alexander Kotikov, who flatly warned the U. S. officials "not to interfere in matters which don't concern them."

Kotikov's letter followed rejection of French protests that demanded the release of another 19 anti-Communist western sector policemen who were kidnaped by Soviet police while traveling in a French convoy under a Russian guarantee of safe conduct.

In the face of these intolerable developments, how could East-West negotiations for a Berlin agreement continue? Apparently they couldn't, except under almost impossible strain.

SECRETARY OF STATE George Marshall charged that the Berlin city hall kidnapings were aimed, at least in part, at disrupting the talks by the four military governors who were, ostensibly, seeking the road to a settlement of the Berlin problem and the issue of uniform currency.

Thus, it was easy to understand why U. S. diplomatic authorities were concerned with the possibility of an early collapse of the formal negotiations. It was likely that the Kremlin would be the first to flash the red light.

Employment Record

The U. S. rounded the turn from summer to autumn with its civilian employment at the highest level in the history of the nation.

Approximately 61.5 million workers are employed, while the unemployed number only 2,227,000 as compared to more than 12 million during the gloomy depression years of the early 1930s. Personal prosperity now depends, however, on the impact of inflation.

Kidneys Must Work Well—
For You To Feel Well
24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.
If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.
Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.
Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

Autumn Offers Many Joys For the Faithful Beholder

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—You are reading these lines, I trust, not too long after the autumnal equinox, which I hope you celebrated with the proper ceremonies.

The word equinox is Latin for "equal night" which implies equal day. All over the earth there is that kind of equality at this time.

Baukhage

Thus the Creator established equality of such nice perfection that neither the strongest telescope nor the most accurate micrometer can question it. Equality was something that had no measure of weight until the philosophers proclaimed it and until it was preached to the western world by a lowly carpenter's son of Nazareth.

We worked nearly 2,000 years before a political goal embodying this philosophy was written into the Constitution of a nation — the United States. It is an unachieved goal but one more nearly reached here than anywhere else in the world—fellow travelers to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Strangely enough, the one idea chiefly associated with equality of day and night—the equinox—has been proved utterly unfounded. For a long time it was generally accepted (and is still believed by many) that violent storms which were given the name, "equinoxial gales" are prevalent at this season.

Suppose you were to approach the 10 men—or twenty or thirty—who have spent the most time studying this particular subject, gathering all the facts, checking all the records available, as long as authentic records have existed. If you asked them if it is true that there are especially bad storms at this time of year, they could answer (in carefully worded and virtually understandable sentences) "That is the bunk!"

At the equinox the sun is in the process of crossing the celestial equator. That is the circle parallel to our equator which if expanded would touch the sun. The sun does this in the spring (vernal equinox) and in the fall (autumnal equinox).

At this season, if you live in my neighborhood (or within several hundred miles thereof) you will heed this piece of advice in the Hagerstown (Md.) Almanack which says:

> The ravages of the tent caterpillars go unnoticed by many persons until the leaves are eaten from a tree. Naturally it makes extra work for the tree to produce another set of new leaves, which weakens the tree, and after a few years of this extra work, the tree is in danger of dying.
> "The greatest natural enemy of the tent caterpillar is the common house wren. These are valuable birds to have in your gardens during the growing season."

And now after that piece of advice, which is not seasonal for my friends "down under" where the autumnal equinox heralds the coming of summer and not fall and winter, let us return to our meteorological mutton.

I will not become technical but I think it is just as well to get better acquainted with the phenomena, natural or otherwise, which surround us. There is no reason why, if one rises late in the night to let the cat in (or out) he need crack a shin on a chair, once he understands why and in what position his wife has moved it since he last noticed its location—and the stars are just celestial furniture.

What Is This Thing 'Retrograde Motion'?

There is a certain "retrograde motion" from east to west of the equinoxial points, which I won't go into in detail for several reasons, one being that I haven't the slightest idea what the phrase means.

Nevertheless, I will mention that retrograde motion was discovered by a gentleman by the name of Hipparchus in the year (about) 120 before Christ. Experts say this motion accounts for the changes in the position of the Pole star, the North Star as it is usually called.

Some people think the Pole star doesn't change. A number of important people since Hipparchus have thought so. Take one, William Shakespeare. Remember in Act III of Julius Caeser when a petition for repeal of the disenfranchisement of Publius Cimber is presented? Cassius drops to his knees to beg for the repeal but Caesar says:

"I could be well moved, if I were as you;
If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:
But I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament,
The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,
They are all fire and every one doth shine,
But there's but one in all doth hold his place . . ."

Perhaps Shakespeare had never read Hipparchus. (Some say he couldn't read but if so, where did he get his plots?) Anyhow, Hipparchus said, (and nobody has disproved his theory) that the position of the Pole star does change (from our viewpoint). One authority explains it this way:

"The pole of the earth is swinging slowly as if it were the axis of a top, or as if the earth, rotating, were a kind of gyroscope." The study of what is called the "precession of the equinoxes" (their moving backward in relation to the constellations) is fascinating. But I have no intention of reading a lecture on astronomy here—for several reasons, including the one mentioned before.

But I do want to mention some things which George Stimson (with whom I have just been talking) brought up. You remember George? He comes from Anamosa, Iowa, where he has just been spending a wonderful vacation with his mother who, at 77, does her own cooking because she likes it better (and, according to George, for good reasons) than anyone's else.

George, to whom most Washingtonians turn when they want the right answer, says that records for a period of 50 years show that there were actually fewer storms during the period between September 20 and 25 (which overlaps the equinox) than there were immediately preceding September 25. The same, he says, is true of the vernal equinox.

"The notion about equinoxial storms in one form or another," says George, "dates back to at least 1748 and probably originated among seafaring people."

All this information is in his "Book About a Thousand Things" and if I had thought to look it up first I wouldn't have interrupted him in his work on his book about a thousand (or more) things regarding American history which will be his next opus and which I'm willing to say in advance of publication is going to be good.

So much for the equinoxes, with whom, since we meet them twice a year, we ought to get better acquainted.

Blackjack Pershing's Life and Times

Speaking of books, Col. Frederick Palmer sent me his latest book entitled "General John J. Pershing." It was written some time ago, recently brought up to date after Palmer's last interview with Pershing, but in accordance with the author's stipulation, was not published until after Pershing's death.

> "It was not to be submitted to him or to appear in the light of an official biography or one authorized by his heirs."

This is stated in the foreword and Palmer elaborated on his attitude to me during a luncheon shortly before the book appeared.

Colonel Palmer is the elder statesman of the war correspondents. But years are of small account to him. He is pert, active and his memory is phenomenal. I knew of him in connection with the Russo-Japanese war although at the time of that conflict my military experience was limited to playing with a painted fleet of warships.

The warships were a Christmas present received while I was still building with blocks and shooting Indians with bows made of umbrella ribs and drilling in an infant cadet corps.

Later I came to know a colleague of Palmer's in that war which gave Japan the toe-hold in the Far East that made her the power she was in World War II. His colleague was Photographer Jimmy Hare, the dean of his clan for many decades.

The Pershing book I have not read at this writing but as soon as I do I'll tell you about it.

Although the special session of congress was mad at the President for calling them back, they gave the reading of his proclamation assembling them a tribute rare in history. They stood up while it was read. They got up because they thought the invocation was about to be made and they didn't like to sit down and reveal their error.

Like Hymns Most

In Chicago the American Music Conference completed a national survey, reported findings no disk jockey in the land could be expected to believe, says Pathfinder. From returns on questionnaires sent to a representative 4,537 U. S. families, AMC announced that 60.8 per cent families put religious music, particularly hymns, at the top of their list. Furthermore, churches were rated above theaters and concerts as the No. 1 outside factor in stimulating musical interest.

First Aid for Angina Pectoris

There are times when a little knowledge of heart disease may be of great value in dealing with heart attacks. One of the most common is angina pectoris. The main symptom of this disease is pain in the chest, usually under the breastbone or in the pit of the stomach. This pain may radiate down the arm and is described as tightness or squeezing in character. Quite frequently it is attended by vomiting, and naturally is thought to be an attack of acute indigestion. The only first aid that can be given in the home is to have the patient sit quietly until the pain subsides. If the patient has been under the care of a physician he will usually carry nitrogycerin tablets given to him by the physician. One of these tablets should be placed under the patient's tongue. If the pain or vomiting continues, a doctor should be called at once. The recognition of this type of heart attack, not putting it down as just indigestion, and seeking medical aid at once, may save a person's life.

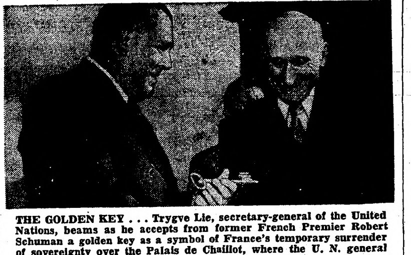
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

1948 Election Campaign Hits Stride As Democrats, GOP Vie for Labor; Soviets Aggravate Berlin Situation

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



THE GOLDEN KEY . . . Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the United Nations, beams as he accepts from former French Premier Robert Schuman a golden key as a symbol of France's temporary surrender of sovereignty over the Palais de Chaillot, where the U. N. general assembly opened on September 21. What treasures of peace that key might unlock this year is a question that gives pause to the entire world.

CAMPAIGN:

Trumpets Sounded

Politicians cleared their throats as with the sound of trumpets, and the 1948 presidential election campaign swept into motion.

The first skirmish between Democrats and Republicans featured President Truman and Harold E. Stassen, who carried the word of their respective parties into the great industrial area around Detroit.

THAT INDICATED that, for the time being at least, the pivotal factor directing the policies of both GOP and Democratic campaigns would be the labor vote.

To win the election this November Mr. Truman probably will need the same proportionate amount of the labor vote that turned out in favor of Roosevelt in the 1932, 1936 and 1940 campaigns. Whether he will get it is very much open to question at this stage.

Truman

Launching his battle for re-election in the Detroit area over the Labor Day week-end, President Truman fired at will.

AT GRAND RAPIDS, Lansing, Detroit, Pontiac and Flint he exhorted all the "little people" of the U. S. to register and vote in the November 2 election.

If a heavy vote turns out, he insisted, not only will he be re-elected, but the Republican majority in congress will be replaced by a Democratic one.

"IF YOU STAY home next November and keep these reactionaries in power, you will deserve every blow you get and you can expect a barrage of body blows," said Mr. Truman. This was a repetition of an idea—that "you'll get what you deserve"—which he had expressed earlier in the year and which, at the time, was received with some animosity by the people to whom he addressed it.

"You can elect a reactionary administration and go into an era of fear, or you can elect a congress and an administration that stand ready to play fair with every element of American life and enter an era of new hope. We're in a hard, tough fight against shrewd, rich opponents. They don't count on your vote; they just don't want you to vote."

Judging from his Labor Day speeches, President Truman is planning to shape his campaign around these contentions:

1. THAT THE MAIN issue boils down to Republican special privileges as against Democratic concern for the little man.
2. THAT THE "DO-NOTHING 80th congress, under GOP control, has done nothing to justify its re-election.
3. THAT ANYTHING EXCEPT an all-out vote by labor on election day "would be a betrayal by labor of its own interests."
4. THAT IF THE MASS of the nation's voters go to the polls on election day a Democratic victory is assured.

Stassen

Just a step and a half behind Mr. Truman came Harold E. Stassen, striving valiantly to scatter the coals of the bonfire the President had kindled in Detroit.

Apparently blessed by Thomas E. Dewey, GOP presidential candidate, Stassen's speech in the motor city was billed as the official kickoff of the Republican campaign.

STASSEN SPARED no words in taking President Truman to task, referring to him as a "complaining" failure who had resorted to "demagogic appeals" in seeking re-election.

Specifically, he charged that Mr. Truman had "dishonored labor with an extreme demagogic appeal to set class against class."

In thus resorting to the time-honored political device of attacking and reproaching the opponent from a personal standpoint, Stassen had gone Mr. Truman one better. In his Detroit addresses the President did not even mention Thomas Dewey.

THE DEFEATED GOP aspirant for the party's nomination declared that Mr. Truman had come not to laud labor for its record, but "as a complaining candidate for election seeking labor's vote."

"His scolding, threatening, complaining speeches" indicated that he lacks the leadership "in affairs at home and abroad so vitally needed in these next crucial years," said Stassen.

"He failed when he had a Democratic congress to work with.

"He failed when he had a Republican congress to work with."

TURNING TO THE political football which the election year has made of the issue of Communist activities in the U. S., Stassen asserted that the Republican party is "driving the red herring out of the official waters of the Potomac" by means of congressional inquiries into the Communist problem.

"Too many red herrings have been in Washington for too long a time," he blasted. "The President should help man the red herring nets instead of complaining against the fishermen."

BERLIN:

More Trouble

There was, it appeared, no end to the Russian-sponsored trouble in Berlin, and it was having its grimly detrimental effect on the fiber of the peace.

Latest incident piled atop many other instances of petty Soviet encroachments, needed little more than a small flame to turn into a funeral pyre for what is left of world harmony.

IT WAS A FLAGRANT invasion of American offices in the Berlin city hall by armed Russian-controlled police who kidnapped 19 western sector policemen who had sought sanctuary in the building.

What the purpose of the raid was never became quite clear. On the surface it looked like pure terrorization carried out as part of the overall Soviet plan eventually to get control of the entire German capital.

AN AMERICAN protest by Col. Frank Howley, American commandant in Berlin, was rejected bluntly by the Soviet commander, Maj. Gen. Alexander Kotikov, who flatly warned the U. S. officials "not to interfere in matters which don't concern them."

Kotikov's letter followed rejection of French protests that demanded the release of another 19 anti-Communist western sector policemen who were kidnaped by Soviet police while traveling in a French convoy under a Russian guarantee of safe conduct.

In the face of these intolerable developments, how could East-West negotiations for a Berlin agreement continue? Apparently they couldn't, except under almost impossible strain.

SECRETARY OF STATE George Marshall charged that the Berlin city hall kidnapings were aimed, at least in part, at disrupting the talks by the four military governors who were, ostensibly, seeking the road to a settlement of the Berlin problem and the issue of uniform currency.

Thus, it was easy to understand why U. S. diplomatic authorities were concerned with the possibility of an early collapse of the formal negotiations. It was likely that the Kremlin would be the first to flash the red light.

Employment Record

The U. S. rounded the turn from summer to autumn with its civilian employment at the highest level in the history of the nation.

Approximately 61.5 million workers are employed, while the unemployed number only 2,227,000 as compared to more than 12 million during the gloomy depression years of the early 1930s. Personal prosperity now depends, however, on the impact of inflation.

Autumn Offers Many Joys For the Faithful Beholder

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—You are reading these lines, I trust, not too long after the autumnal equinox, which I hope you celebrated with the proper ceremonies.

The word equinox is Latin for "equal night" which implies equal day. All over the earth there is that kind of equality at this time.

Thus the Creator established equality of such nice perfection that neither the strongest telescope nor the most accurate micrometer can question it. Equality was something that had no measure of weight until the philosophers proclaimed it and until it was preached to the western world by a lowly carpenter's son of Nazareth.

Baukhage

We worked nearly 2,000 years before a political goal embodying this philosophy was written into the Constitution of a nation—the United States. It is an unachieved goal but one more nearly reached here than anywhere else in the world—fellow travelers to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Strangely enough, the one idea chiefly associated with equality of day and night—the equinox—has been proved utterly unfounded. For a long time it was generally accepted (and is still believed by many) that violent storms which were given the name, "equinoxial gales" are prevalent at this season.

Suppose you were to approach the 10 men—or twenty or thirty—who have spent the most time studying this particular subject, gathering all the facts, checking all the records available, as long as authentic records have existed. If you asked them if it is true that there are especially bad storms at this time of year, they could answer (in carefully worded and virtually understandable sentences) "That is the bunk!"

At the equinox the sun is in the process of crossing the celestial equator. That is the circle parallel to our equator which if expanded would touch the sun. The sun does this in the spring (vernal equinox) and in the fall (autumnal equinox).

At this season, if you live in my neighborhood (or within several hundred miles thereof) you will heed this piece of advice in the Hagerstown (Md.) Almanack which says:

> The ravages of the tent caterpillars go unnoticed by many persons until the leaves are eaten from a tree. Naturally it makes extra work for the tree to produce another set of new leaves, which weakens the tree, and after a few years of this extra work, the tree is in danger of dying.
> "The greatest natural enemy of the tent caterpillar is the common house wren. These are valuable birds to have in your gardens during the growing season."

And now after that piece of advice, which is not seasonal for my friends "down under" where the autumnal equinox heralds the coming of summer and not fall and winter, let us return to our meteorological mutton.

I will not become technical but I think it is just as well to get better acquainted with the phenomena, natural or otherwise, which surround us. There is no reason why, if one rises late in the night to let the cat in (or out) he need crack a shin on a chair, once he understands why and in what position his wife has moved it since he last noticed its location—and the stars are just celestial furniture.

What Is This Thing 'Retrograde Motion'?

There is a certain "retrograde motion" from east to west of the equinoxial points, which I won't go into in detail for several reasons, one being that I haven't the slightest idea what the phrase means.

Nevertheless, I will mention that retrograde motion was discovered by a gentleman by the name of Hipparchus in the year (about) 120 before Christ. Experts say this motion accounts for the changes in the position of the Pole star, the North Star as it is usually called.

Some people think the Pole star doesn't change. A number of important people since Hipparchus have thought so. Take one, William Shakespeare. Remember in Act III of Julius Caeser when a petition for repeal of the disenfranchisement of Publius Cimber is presented? Cassius drops to his knees to beg for the repeal but Caesar says:

"I could be well moved, if I were as you;
If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:
But I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality
There is no fellow in the firmament,
The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,
They are all fire and every one
doth shine,
But there's but one in all doth hold his place . . ."

Perhaps Shakespeare had never read Hipparchus. (Some say he couldn't read but if so, where did he get his plots?) Anyhow, Hipparchus said, (and nobody has disproved his theory) that the position of the Pole star does change (from our viewpoint). One authority explains it this way:

"The pole of the earth is swinging slowly as if it were the axis of a top, or as if the earth, rotating, were a kind of gyroscope." The study of what is called the "precession of the equinoxes" (their moving backward in relation to the constellations) is fascinating. But I have no intention of reading a lecture on astronomy here—for several reasons, including the one mentioned before.

But I do want to mention some things which George Stimson (with whom I have just been talking) brought up. You remember George? He comes from Anamosa, Iowa, where he has just been spending a wonderful vacation with his mother who, at 77, does her own cooking because she likes it better (and, according to George, for good reasons) than anyone's else.

George, to whom most Washingtonians turn when they want the right answer, says that records for a period of 50 years show that there were actually fewer storms during the period between September 20 and 25 (which overlaps the equinox) than there were immediately preceding September 25. The same, he says, is true of the vernal equinox.

"The notion about equinoxial storms in one form or another," says George, "dates back to at least 1748 and probably originated among seafaring people."

All this information is in his "Book About a Thousand Things" and if I had thought to look it up first I wouldn't have interrupted him in his work on his book about a thousand (or more) things regarding American history which will be his next opus and which I'm willing to say in advance of publication is going to be good.

So much for the equinoxes, with whom, since we meet them twice a year, we ought to get better acquainted.

Blackjack Pershing's Life and Times

Speaking of books, Col. Frederick Palmer sent me his latest book entitled "General John J. Pershing." It was written some time ago, recently brought up to date after Palmer's last interview with Pershing, but in accordance with the author's stipulation, was not published until after Pershing's death.

> "It was not to be submitted to him or to appear in the light of an official biography or one authorized by his heirs."

This is stated in the foreword and Palmer elaborated on his attitude to me during a luncheon shortly before the book appeared.

Colonel Palmer is the elder statesman of the war correspondents. But years are of small account to him. He is pert, active and his memory is phenomenal. I knew of him in connection with the Russo-Japanese war although at the time of that conflict my military experience was limited to playing with a painted fleet of warships.

The warships were a Christmas present received while I was still building with blocks and shooting Indians with bows made of umbrella ribs and drilling in an infant cadet corps.

Later I came to know a colleague of Palmer's in that war which gave Japan the toe-hold in the Far East that made her the power she was in World War II. His colleague was Photographer Jimmy Hare, the dean of his clan for many decades.

The Pershing book I have not read at this writing but as soon as I do I'll tell you about it.

Although the special session of congress was mad at the President for calling them back, they gave the reading of his proclamation assembling them a tribute rare in history. They stood up while it was read. They got up because they thought the invocation was about to be made and they didn't like to sit down and reveal their error.

Like Hymns Most

In Chicago the American Music Conference completed a national survey, reported findings no disk jockey in the land could be expected to believe, says Pathfinder. From returns on questionnaires sent to a representative 4,537 U. S. families, AMC announced that 60.8 per cent families put religious music, particularly hymns, at the top of their list. Furthermore, churches were rated above theaters and concerts as the No. 1 outside factor in stimulating musical interest.

First Aid for Angina Pectoris

There are times when a little knowledge of heart disease may be of great value in dealing with heart attacks. One of the most common is angina pectoris. The main symptom of this disease is pain in the chest, usually under the breastbone or in the pit of the stomach. This pain may radiate down the arm and is described as tightness or squeezing in character. Quite frequently it is attended by vomiting, and naturally is thought to be an attack of acute indigestion. The only first aid that can be given in the home is to have the patient sit quietly until the pain subsides. If the patient has been under the care of a physician he will usually carry nitrogycerin tablets given to him by the physician. One of these tablets should be placed under the patient's tongue. If the pain or vomiting continues, a doctor should be called at once. The recognition of this type of heart attack, not putting it down as just indigestion, and seeking medical aid at once, may save a person's life.

Tap-Rooted Legumes Open 'Stuffy' Soils To Air and Moisture

CHICAGO—Deep-rooted legumes are a tool for making "pay dirt" out of heavy, hard packed soil, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"The 'bottom' soils on thousands of Midwestern farms are so tightly compacted below the plow furrows," says the statement, "that crop growth is seriously hampered.

"Such soils have lost their nourishing cushion of organic matter because of ovrecropping. Soil structure has been broken down by failure to include well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes and grasses in the rotation.

"Rain does not soak into compacted soils. Drainage is poor. Roots of corn and grain cannot penetrate below the topsoil for water and plant nutrients.

"The result is weak root development, stunted, ill-nourished growth above ground and low crop yields.

"These tightly closed soils can be unlocked by deep-rooted legumes. The tap-roots of sweet clover or alfalfa well fertilized with phosphorus and potash drill straight down into the soil. They penetrate not only the plow sole, but push on down 18 to 25 inches into the subsoil below."

APPRECIATION

I again extend my sincere thanks to the voters of Marshall County for their support of my condidacy at the Primary Election for renomination as your Representative in the State Legislature. I assure all of you that your vote is appreciated and trust that I may merit your further support at the November election. Thanks again.

Lonely Isles

The remote British islands of Tristan da Cunha, in the far South Atlantic, are known as the "lonely isles." World War I was nearly over before news of its outbreak reached inhabitants of these islands. Years passed before the islanders heard of the armistice. By contrast, it was through World War II that Tristan da Cunha began losing its isolation. In 1942, a secret meteoriogical and radio station was set up there by the British royal navy and the South African air force.

Great Clock of Strasbourg

One of the most unusual clocks in the world is the great clock in the Cathedral of Strasbourg, France. This clock not only tells the hour and the positions of the heavenly bodies, but also points to the day of the month, according to the World Book Encyclopedia. Below the dial which tells the time of day is a procession of gods and godesses which show the days of the week. Quarter hours are struck by figures on the clock, one of which turns an hourglass. At noon each day a procession of the apostles appears, while a cock above crows three times.

Duck Hunt Season Opens Oct. 8

Minnesota's vast army of duck hunters will invade the sloughs of the state in quest of the elusive honker beginning at noon on Friday, October 8 in a season that runs thru November 6.

The waterfowl opening will be the baptism of fire for a 1948 small game season in Minnesota that will offer hunters a fare of pheasants, hungarian partridge, ruffed grouse, sharptailed grouse quail, squirrel, racoon and hare. The rails and gallinules and sora opened Sept. 16, and woodcock Oct. 2.

Big game seekers will stand by until October 16 when the statewide season on deer for Bow and Arrow only opens, and November 20, when specified areas will be open to the taking of deer by firearms or with bow and arrow.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The parallel in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

Contour Planting

Contour planting is simply planting on the level. Each row, being at a right angle to the natural direction of flow, acts as a miniature dam to hold back water and allow it, or a large portion of it, to soak into the soil. However, rows may be slightly off the exact contour, without interfering with their efficiency; in fact, in regions of heavy rainfall there is an advantage in having them drain to one side of the garden or to a prepared outlet.

Netherlands Trade

Despite manifold difficulties, Holland's trade with Germany increased slightly in the second half of 1947, according to the first annual report published by the Netherland Trust Company for Trade with Foreign Countries. The company was floated in January 1947, in agreement with the Netherlands Government and the Allied occupation authorities in Germany for the purpose of promoting Netherlands trade with Germany and other countries.

Location of Apiaries

Bees will fly an average distance of one and one-half to two miles in search of nectar and pollen, and much farther if necessary. It is seldom practical, therefore, to locate apiaries closer than a mile apart, unless the nectar production warrants. The number of colonies in any particular region will also influence the number that should be kept in each apiary.

Farm Labor Camps

A total of 109 farm labor camps, used in housing migratory agricultural workers under the recently concluded farm labor program, have been sold by the department of agriculture. Most of these camps will continue to be used as housing for farm workers, and will continue in operation on the same sites, which were leased by the government when the camps were built.

4-H Club Project

Approximately 200,000 farm youth are taking part in the national 4-H field crops program in 1948. The program is designed to help 4-H club members acquire a better knowledge and develop skills in approved farming practices.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Indian Troops Invade Hyderabad, Endanger Country's Shaky Peace; Russia Confuses Crisis in Berlin

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

The Last Mogul

Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan, sometimes called the richest man in the world, is the Nizam of Hyderabad, land-locked princely state in India which was attacked by India's dominion troops.

INVASION:

Hyderabad

Events in India were a far cry from the days when Mohandas Gandhi's philosophy of passive diplomacy prevailed among the affairs of that sub-continent.

Indian troops, strongly supported by armored units, had invaded the princely state of Hyderabad (see map) whose Moslem ruler—called the Nizam—had refused to join with the other Indian dominions even though Hyderabad's population is predominantly Hindu.

THAT WAS THE whole story. The Nizam and his small, compact Moslem court would not agree to follow the other Indian princely states in acceding to the Dominion of India which was established last year.

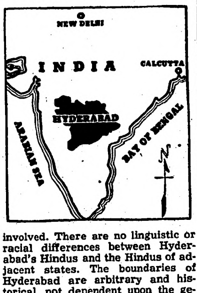
The Nizam, often called the richest man in the world, and the only surviving heir of the great Mogul empire, wanted to rule an independent hyderabad.

Whether he could have succeeded in doing that, even if the dominion government had not opened hostilities against him, is questionable. Hyderabad is completely landlocked and has no access to the sea except by courtesy of the states surrounding it. All of its imports and exports, therefore, must pass through India.

WHILE HYDERABAD might profess its independence as a state, chances are that the economic and political conditions of actual independence never could be achieved.

Can India's invasion of Hyderabad be justified? Not too easily, if at all. It was not a matter of sending a police force into the state to quell internal disorders. It was, apparently, a deliberate act of aggression and as such should go before the U. N. security council for judgment.

From a practical standpoint there was not only no need for the invasion but there is an actual danger involved. There are no linguistic or racial differences between Hyderabad's Hindus and the Hindus of adjacent states. The boundaries of Hyderabad are arbitrary and historical, not dependent upon the geography of the vicinity.



INDIA MIGHT well have refrained from pushing the issue for a year or two, pending a peaceful settlement.

The potential danger lies in two phases of the situation:

1. THE HYDERABAD war might prove to be the factor that will precipitate violent conflict between Hindu and Moslem Pakistan, whose more or less peaceful relations now are strained and uneasy.

2. IT IS A BLOW to the British Commonwealth, to which both India and Pakistan still belong. With the Russians acting the way they are, any disturbance of the delicate balance of power that still prevails in the East could bring still another catastrophe down upon the world.

RUSSIANS:

Fantastic

Not even the most starry-eyed Pollyana could deny that the U. S.-Soviet fracas over Berlin was downright fantastic and getting more so every day.

The whole thing simply had stopped making sense, even to many of the diplomats who were embroiled in the situation.

WHAT CHANCE was there for any logical kind of peace when, even while western diplomats were in Moscow attempting to work out a formula with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, the Russians in Berlin were inciting riots, kidnapping western sector policemen and firing on American planes engaged in the air-lift?

One complication was being piled on top of another, with the ensuing result that any possibility of a peaceful solution was getting buried deeper and deeper.

That all this confusion was being fostered deliberately by the Soviets was quite evident. Their purpose for so doing was more obscure.

THE RUSSIANS want full control of Berlin, taking that as their immediate objective. Ultimately they want to force American occupation troops completely out of Germany, after which Russia could take over the great German industrial potential, including the inestimably valuable Ruhr section.

However, there might be still another reason for this display of Soviet diplomatic aggression which was planned almost a year ago to erupt this fall.

The Russians might be trying to harass the western nations to the point where the entire Berlin issue will be dumped in the lap of the United Nations. Once the crisis comes under U. N. jurisdiction the Russians might plan to use the inevitable squabble as a pretext for resigning from the world organization and taking their satellite states with them.

THE EAST-WEST split into two opposing power spheres then would be complete. Moreover, the U. N. itself probably would be reduced to total impotency in guiding international affairs.

And the question of whether the Soviet Union is entertaining motives like these might be answered by the end of the year. For the western nations were determined that if they didn't get some satisfaction from Moscow soon they would arraign Russia before the United Nations this fall.

COTTON:

Lift Dat Bale

With the largest cotton crop since 1937 being harvested this year, Uncle Sam is making ready to stage a comeback in the cotton buying business.

Of the 15,219,000 bales to come off the land, the cotton trade estimates that about a third will go into storage under federal loan.

TWENTY-ONE MILLION people in the United States depend on cotton for their livelihood, and the fate of the cotton crop, therefore, is not only a personal but a national concern.

The federal government is coming into the picture because cotton prices are coming down. They have reached 31.04 cents a pound, which is pretty close to the support floor of 30.74 cents.

Here's what happens:

WHEN THE COTTON grower hauls his crop to the warehouse he gets a receipt for it, and then he either sells the cotton at the market price or accepts the government's standing offer to lend him money on it.

If he chooses to accept the loan, he is paid 30.74 cents a pound on the average—the exact price depending on the kind and quality of the cotton.

Then he is free, for one year, to sell the cotton for more money, provided the price goes up. If he doesn't sell it within a year the government becomes owner of the crop.

PROBABLE EFFECT of this operation will be to keep a lot of cotton off the market this year, thus preventing the price from dropping through the support floor. Also, it will result in the government's ending the year with several million bales of cotton on its hands.

THICKER THAN FLIES

Russia Is Well Supplied With Manpower

Russia and the Soviet satellites are appallingly well supplied with manpower for military purposes, according to official estimates in Washington.

In Soviet Russia alone there exists a tremendous reservoir of able-bodied men for land armies. Best estimates indicate the existence of 175 divisions of Russian ground force and security troops, embodying a total of three million men and including about 400,000 MVD security troops.

Eight Soviet satellite states are reputed to be able to muster a total of about 100 divisions of 1,121,600 men. That makes a grand total of 4,121,600 soldiers in 274 divisions, many of whom are deployed at or near the point at which war conceivably could start.

BIG FOUR:

Or Little 14?

The U. S. government's spectacular suit against the "big four" meat packing companies—Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson—promised to be one of the biggest anti-trust actions since President Theodore Roosevelt said something about carrying a big stick.

Filed by the justice department in federal court in Chicago, the suit asks that the four companies be broken up into 14 separate firms. Specifically, the U. S. wants Swift and Armour to be carved into five separate companies each and Wilson and Cudahy each to be split into two firms.

TOM CLARK, attorney general, said in a statement: "The four defendants named in the complaint are charged with suppressing competition in the sale of meat and meat products." The Sherman anti-trust law is being invoked in the action.

Clark described the suit as "another in a series of cases instituted by the department of justice in furtherance of its program to free the production and sale of food and food products from monopolistic restraints."

THE PACKERS had another story to tell, however, with "playing politics," as one of their key phrases.

Said John Holmes, president of Swift and company: "It is significant that the charges appear at the beginning of this fall's political campaign. Apparently an attempt is being made to shift responsibility for inflationary price trends.

"No one can control either livestock prices or meat prices," Holmes fumed.

INFRA-RED:

Frost Killer

The day—or night—of the old-fashioned smudge pot as the main buffer between plants and killing frost may be nearing an end.

Science has taken over to come up with a new kind of frost killer, development of which was sponsored by the American Iron and Steel institute.

THE CONTRAPTION, known as the Plymouth infra-red lamp, is in a fair way to affect materially the nation's agricultural system, the institute thinks.

Reporting on the new device, the institute pointed out that while farmers will find the lamp invaluable in saving crops during the first touches of frost, the growing season actually may be extended as techniques for its use are developed.

Dr. Arthur W. Farrell of Michigan State college, one of the men responsible for development of the infra-red machine, cited an example: "On September 2, 1946, to take one example, Michigan had a two-hour killing frost. The next frost did not occur until October 1, a month later. Had tomato and melon growers been able to protect their crops for about two hours on the morning of September 2, they would have had four more weeks of very favorable growing weather. As it was, they lost everything.

"THE FROST dispeller, made up of sheet steel and a little ingenuity, will put an end to some of nature's nonsense."

The lamp is composed of a circular piece of stainless steel, shaped in cone-shaped steps, with an oil burner within the framework. When the burner is put into action, the steel heats until it becomes cherry-red. At this point, infra-red rays are thrown off, spreading over the area to be warmed, even entering the ground in their intensity.

BLIMP:

Biggest Yet

Biggest blimp the U. S. navy ever ordered and the first to be contracted for since the war soon will be under construction at the Goodyear Aircraft corporation in Akron, Ohio, the U. S. navy bureau of aeronautics has announced.

The ship will have a helium capacity of 825,000 cubic feet and an empty weight of about 34,000 pounds. It will be 324 feet long, 71 feet wide and 92 feet high.

Insects Cause Feed Loss

Insect pests reduced cottonseed production last year by an amount which would have provided 4,500,000 people for a year with as much fat as now is included in European diets. Each 100 pounds of cottonseed meal will replace 250 to 300 pounds of grain when the oil meal is used for livestock feed. Some authorities estimate that control of insects that attack corn would add 100 million bushels to annual yields.

Tractor Care

To keep the tractor running smoothly, one of the most important jobs is to help the air cleaner do its work. The air cleaner removes dust and dirt from the air before it passes through the engine. Farmers who clean the air cleaner and replace the oil once or twice a day when working under dusty conditions find they save money on repair bills.

Bessemer Process

One of the oldest and most spectacular of all the present processes employed in steel-making is the Bessemer process. A blast of air is blown through the molten iron, and elements such as carbon and silicon are oxidized in the intense heat that is generated. Modern converters can produce about 25 tons of steel in as many minutes in a single "blow."

Bow Hunting for Deer

At the end of the last fall season, the total number of arrow-killed deer during the 13 years of legalized bow hunting in Wisconsin was less than 1,000, considerably less than the salvaged illegal gun kill during the 1947 big game season. Today bowmen do not bag 1 per cent of the legal annual kill. More deer have been killed by automobiles than by bow hunters.

Hull Realized the Gravity Of Post-War Readjustment

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"I wish," he said, "I wish I could burn this into your minds and memories for the next 50 years at least—that the human race this hour, this day, this week, this year is confronted with the gravest crisis in all its experience, and that we who are here on the scene of action, at this critical time, have the responsibility of saying what way the world is going for 50 years to come."

Those words I recorded in 1945 as the war in Europe was drawing to its close. They were spoken by a man now retired from public life who is living to see their significance growing each day—Cordell Hull who on October 2 reached his 77th year.

BAUKHAGE

He spoke that sentence at an off-the record press conference in his office in the old State, War and Navy building and the fire of conviction in his voice created such an impression that we asked him to let us quote him directly that one sentence. For that reason I have been able to reproduce it literally.

Since that day in 1945 we have seen President Roosevelt die and Secretary Hull retire; peace come in Europe; the United Nations founded and then, all unexpectedly, the new and terrible force released which brought the sudden cessation of hostilities in the Far East.

We saw, too, (few of us realized it) a tiny cloud no bigger than a man's hand, take shape on the horizon of world relations.

Cordell Hull realized the necessity of maintaining friendly relations between the United States and Russia. Against the advice of his physicians and the wishes of the wife to whom he was devoted, he flew to Moscow to talk to the one man upon whom the future of world peace then seemed to depend.

I had the great privilege of talking with Secretary Hull on the eve of his departure for Moscow. When I was shown into his office he was sitting at the great desk in the room from whose windows have looked so many of the great statesmen who have been America's spokesman to the world.

The office of the secretary of state has been removed from the ancient rococo building next to the White House which, with its high ceilings, its gloomy marble corridors, wide stairways and its fireplaces, which was filled with a certain odor of sanctity, slightly tinged with a touch of obsolenscence which spoke of days and eras that were gone forever.

Today, the offices of the men who direct our foreign affairs are housed in an ultra-modern building, air-cooled, brisk, almost modernistic in its design. But I can imagine that History, as she solemnly records each day's agenda of 1948, must smile a bit ironically when she notes the similarity of today's record and that which was the chief concern of Cordell Hull.

When he rose to greet me on the occasion of my earlier interview with the courtesy which was a natural characteristic and one not acquired by acquaintanceship with the masters of diplomatic protocol, his desk was covered with papers. He indicated them with a gesture and explained that they all dealt with his forthcoming mission to Moscow.

We talked for a long time and the viewpoint he expressed then concerning our policy toward Russia remained unchanged on his return.

Russia's Background Forms Her Attitude

I saw him again with a small group after his return and he reminded us that Russia's attitude must be considered against her background, that she was a nation which had been virtually locked up for 25 years and during all that time had heard nothing but epithets against her, that she had cultivated the habit of slapping back twice as hard whenever she heard anything she thought was criticism against her.

Thus, a defense psychology was built up, a suspicious attitude toward the whole world, which made the Soviet psychology entirely different from ours. Each had much to learn from the other, both must improve, and that, Hull said, would take time.

He felt very much the same way when he concluded his memoirs this year and offered this advice.

"In dealing with the Soviet Union we must never waver in this determination or give any evidence of weakness, or cease to insist that, although she is entitled to freedom from intervention in her domestic affairs by any other nation, her government has no right to force communism on other nations or to intervene in their domestic affairs in any other way."

As Cordell Hull looked back on his long period of public service the last years of which covered the most trying times up to then that our nation has faced, he came to the conclusion which more and more of our great leaders are reaching today and he said:

"We have a desperate need for more religion and morality as the background for government. The religious and moral foundations for thought and conduct require strengthening here as well as throughout the world. There is no higher civilizing influence than religious and moral concepts. Corruption and tyranny can be driven out of government only when these concepts give men the faculty to recognize such evils and the strength to eliminate them."

If the political pendulum swings at the next election as is likely, and the logical appointee for the office of secretary of state is named, it will be John Foster Dulles. It will be a satisfaction to many to know that he shares the views of Mr. Hull in so far as they both recognize the importance of the influence of religion in the carrying out of our relations, domestic as well as international.

For those who, as Cordell Hull said, "are here on the scene of action at this critical time," this fact is vital, since we have the responsibility of saying "what way the world is going for 50 years to come."

Charles E. Hughes— Two-Career Man

To mention the office of secretary of state naturally brings forth memories of another great statesman who held that office and whose death occurred recently — Charles Evans Hughes.

Chief Justice Hughes had a remarkable career. In fact, he had two careers, each lasting 43 years. The first as a brilliant and successful lawyer in private practice and the second as a public servant holding among others two of the highest positions in public life in America, secretary of state and chief justice.

I happened to be present on two occasions within a few hours of each other which might be the high and the low point of any man's career.

With a group of reporters covering his headquarters in New York on election day I bid him good-night, fully believing as he and all of us did, that he was the president-elect. I saw him the next morning when he came to the door of his hotel room with a grandchild in his arms to take in the morning paper which recorded the late returns from the West and gave the majority of the electoral votes to Woodrow Wilson.

That same night Woodrow Wilson had gone to bed accepting defeat. The only paper supporting him which failed to haul down the flag (signal of Republican victory) was the old New York Evening Post whose special correspondent, David Lawrence, had predicted Wilson's re-election and stuck to it when he was almost alone in his belief.

How much of a disappointment Hughes suffered it's hard to say. No man was ever more reluctant about accepting the candidacy and the fact that he received such a proportionately large popular vote must have been gratification enough. He looked forward with anticipation and pleasure to his return to private life but his keen interest in the law caused him to accept the judgeship on the world court.

He made a brilliant secretary of state under Harding and continued under President Coolidge. His selection as chief justice of the supreme court by President Hoover was perhaps a most fortunate thing in the light of the crisis brought about by the famous "court packing" fight under Roosevelt.

His success as Chief Justice was due not only to his remarkable knowledge of the law but his tremendous capacity for work and his ability to reconcile different points of view among the members without attempting to enforce his own legal viewpoint upon the individual.

Hughes was a brilliant speaker. He spoke naturally and easily, yet with an excellent choice of words. Although he was extremely dignified in appearance and manner he was able to convey a warmth of feeling which immediately aroused sympathy and interest in an audience.

Six miles from Boise, Ida., off U. S. highway 30 on the Boise river was a little dell that rapscallions favored in the 60's as a holdup spot. An eastbound stagecoach from Boise was stopped by a lone highwayman here, and, as the bandit struggled to make off with the heavy strongbox and its $50,000 in gold, a sharp-eyed passenger nailed him with a pistol shot. The wounded bandit hit for the brush, lugging the loot, and disappeared. The next day, however, he was found dead by a posse—but he had buried the gold somewhere nearby. It has never been found to this day.

Proposed AMENDMENTS to the CONSTITUTION of MINNESOTA

J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General
State Capitol
St. Paul 1, Minn.

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your request asking me to furnish you with a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 639.

This chapter of the 1947 laws proposes an amendment to Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution of Minnesota. This section of the Constitution authorizes the state to levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state. As the Constitution now reads, it provides that two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund provided for in Section 2 of Article XVI of the State Constitution, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to change these provisions for the distribution of the proceeds of such tax so as to provide that one-half of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund and one-half thereof shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund.

The effect of the proposed amendment is to reduce the proportion of the proceeds of such tax which shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund from two-thirds to one-half and increase the proportion thereof which shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund from one-third to one-half.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640.

Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640, proposes an amendment to Article XIV, Section 1, of the Constitution of Minnesota. The Constitution now provides that:

"Whenever a majority of both houses of the legislature shall deem it necessary to alter or amend this Constitution, they may propose such alterations or amendments, which proposed amendments shall be published with the laws which have been passed at the same session, and said amendments shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection at any general election, and if it shall appear, in a manner to be provided by law, that a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for and ratified such alterations or amendments, the same shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution. If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

The purpose of the amendment proposed by said Laws 1947, Chapter 640, is to eliminate from Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution as it now reads the following words, to-wit:

"If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution, as now worded, requires that if two or more proposed amendments are submitted at the same election they shall be so submitted that the voters may vote for or against each separately. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate that requirement. The effect of its adoption would be to make it possible for the legislature to submit two or more proposed alterations or amendments to the State Constitution at the same time in such form that a voter thereon shall be required to vote for or against all of them as a group and not on each separately.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 641.

Laws 1947, Chapter 641, proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota, Article XIV, Section 2.

Said Article XIV, Section 2, now reads as follows:

"Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature shall think it necessary to call a convention to revise this Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote at the next general election for members of the legislature, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for a convention, the legislature shall, at their next session, provide by law for calling the same. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner, and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

If the amendment is adopted, said Article XIV, Section 2, would read as follows:

"Two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature may provide by law for calling a convention to revise this Constitution. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

Under the present provisions of the Constitution, the calling of a convention to revise it requires that the legislature, by a vote of two thirds of the members of each House, shall submit to the voters of the state at the next general election the question as to whether such convention shall be called by the legislature at its next session.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the requirement of a vote on the question by the voters of the state and to authorize, without such vote, two thirds of the members of each House to provide by law for calling such a convention.

The effect of the proposed amendment to Article XIV, Section 2, of the State Constitution, is to transfer the power to call a convention to revise the State Constitution from the electors expressing their will by a majority of all the electors voting at said election to two thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement of the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 642.

This law proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article to be known as Article XX of the Constitution. The proposed amendment to be known as Article XX would read as follows:

"Section 1. The state may at any time pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946; may levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose; and if and whenever authorized, and in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the Legislature, may expend monies, may contract debts, may issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and may pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor. The provisions of section 5 of Article 9 of the Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes.

"Sec. 2. Repealing inconsistent provisions. Any and all provisions of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the Legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of the proposed amendment to the State Constitution which would be known as Article XX thereof is to empower the state at any time to pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946. It will also empower the state to levy taxes and appropriate for such purpose; and, in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the legislature, to expend monies, contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and to pledge the public credit, to provide money for such adjusted compensation. The proposed amendment will expressly provide that the provisions of Article IX, Section 5, of the State Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of the proposed Article XX and that the purposes for which the credit may be given or loaned thereunder are declared to be public purposes.

The effect of the proposed amendment will be to empower the legislature to enact the legislation necessary to provide for the payment of an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period therein designated, to levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose, to contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness and pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor.

Further, the proposed amendment would remove the restrictions, if any, in Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution, relating to the expenditure of public money and the contracting of public debts for the purposes stated, and would declare that the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned in pursuance of the amendment are public purposes.

The proposed amendment would also repeal any provisions of the Constitution of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of the amendment.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

Reasons For Paint Failure

Too much oil causes paint to dry slowly, become dirty and fade. Too little oil causes it to wear off rapidly. Cracking is caused by hard, quick-drying paints. Wrinkles show up because of improper brushing of heavy oily mixtures. Chalking usually comes about because too much thinner is used or by skimping on the number of coats.

Your Most Important Right

Now that the bandstand has been painted, and the park re-landscaped, we have about the nicest village green in the county.

And it's all because, at the last town election, folks got out and voted—85 per cent of them! That way, they passed the amendment calling for park improvements—over those opposing it.

Reminds you again how important the right to vote is in this country. And it's a right we can retain only by exercising it! . . . like all the other individual liberties—from freedom to enjoy a glass of beer or ale, to a woman's right to vote along with men.

Folks can thank themselves that on summer evenings they'll be able to listen to band concerts in a well-kept park . . . enjoying a bottle of beer or soda pop (whichever they prefer). Because from where I sit, that's a freedom they've earned by exercising a still more important freedom: Voting!

Barley Yields Upped, Quality Is Improved With Plant Food Use

CHICAGO—Fertilizing barley with the plant food it needs is a profitable investment, yield records from several midwestern agricultural colleges reveal. As many as 20 more bushels of barley on some soils in favorable years have come from the use of fertilizer, according to a statement issued here by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. How big the increases are depends on how fertile the soil is at the start and how favorable conditions are during the growing season.

Plant Food Helps Give Top Quality Malting Barley Like This Sample.

Adding needed plant food boosted barley yields in Iowa by 15 bushels per acre. Experiments in Michigan showed 16 bushels increase. In Wisconsin fertilizer boosted yields an average of 14 bushels per acre. In South Dakota nitrogen and phosphate boosted barley yields by 15 bushels.

Top yields most generally give top quality, too, says the statement. And when this extra quality is combined with proper seed and careful threshing, farmers can get a premium price for the barley as malting barley.

The right kind and amount of fertilizer to use depends on the kind of soil you have and the way you have handled it in the past. You can find the kind of fertilizer needed for your crops by consulting your county agricultural agent, state agronomist, and by checking with your neighbors who have used fertilizer on barley.

HIGH PRICES

Prices are dangerously high. It is now three years since the close of World War 2. Approximately three years after World War 1, prices, which had mounted steadily for a long period, collapsed.

This is not a prophecy. We make no claim to knowing the future of markets. The paralled in time and conditions in the two periods mentioned is, however worthy of note. Present prices are dangerously high. There is general anxiety respecting them.

Unless you are in position to absorb a SUBSTANTIAL loss, and are entirely willing to assume that risk, DO NOT BUY AT THESE PRICES.

Specifically, do not expect your bank to make a loan which easily may prove embarrassing to both borrower and lender. Note, too, that the real embarrassment falls first on the borrower.

Business men and Farmers, who successfully survive recessions and depressions are those who meet it with a small proportion of indebtedness.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Bernadotte's Murder Dramatizes Question of Palestine Before U.N.; East-West Crisis Hits Final Peak

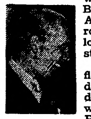
—By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer—

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

HOLY LAND:
Murder

The sullen-faced, uniformed men in the jeep didn't say a word after they had stopped the procession of United Nations cars that was winding through the Katamon section of Jerusalem.

Carrying a machine gun, one of them walked up to the automobile in which Count Folke Bernadotte and Col. Andre Pierre Serrot were sitting, looked inside and started shooting.



Bernadotte

The two killers fled, leaving Serrot dead and Bernadotte mortally wounded. The U. N. Palestine mediator died as he was being carried into Hadassah hospital on a stretcher.

For Bernadotte, head of the Swedish Red Cross, nephew of the king of Sweden, diplomat and humanitarian, it was a wretched, futile end.

His death was mourned not only by governments but by millions of ordinary citizens, yet he died not knowing when or if ever his assiduous and sincere efforts to organize peace in the Holy Land would be fulfilled.

Bernadotte's assassination brought Jerusalem—and all of Palestine, for that matter—perilously close to the brink of general violence. There was danger, too, that the uneasy Arab-Jewish truce might fall to pieces under the circumstances.

For the time being, Bernadotte's killers remained unidentified. The Israeli government called it the work of Stern gang terrorists and issued an edict outlawing that extremist group.

In Oslo, Norway, U. N. Secretary-General Trygve Lie added his panegyric to the praise that was being heaped on the martyred Bernadotte:

"He burned with eagerness to bring about an understanding between Arabs and Jews. He thought always of justice and peace."

FINAL REPORT:
'End It Now'

As the United Nations general assembly convened for its fateful 1948-49 session in the Palais de Chaillot the member nations took time out to pay somber tribute to Count Folke Bernadotte, their representative in Palestine who had died while trying to implement the peace of which they were supposed to be the architects.

Then they began consideration of the plan for an enforced Palestine settlement that Bernadotte had submitted before his death.

THE SWEDISH COUNT'S final 35,000-word report recommended that the Arab-Jewish war should be "pronounced formally ended." If the Arabs and Jews refuse to make peace, the U. N. should do so itself, the report said.

It calls for changes in the boundaries of the U. N. partition plan adopted in November, 1947, proposing that the Negeb desert by given to the Arabs and that the Jews should receive all of Gallilee instead of only the eastern part.

Other recommendations include:

1. INTERNATIONALIZATION of Jerusalem by placing it under U. N. control.

2. ESTABLISHMENT of a technical boundaries commission to delimit the new frontiers.

3. CREATION of a Palestine conciliation commission to deal with population exchanges and supervise other parts of U. N. decisions.

4. SETTLEMENT of the problem of 360,000 Arab refugees by giving them the right to return to their homes in Jewish territory or to receive compensation if they choose not to return.

It was a good plan, the United States thought, and Secretary of State Marshall announced that this nation would back it to the fullest extent. Said Marshall:

"THE UNITED STATES considers that the conclusions contained in the final report of Count Bernadotte offer a generally fair basis for settlement of the Palestine question."

He called it "the best possible basis for bringing peace to a distracted land," adding that "No plan could be proposed which would be entirely satisfactory in all respects to every interested party."

Shrinkage

Since 1939 the total number of dollars in circulation in the U. S. has more than trebled—from 33 billion to nearly 109 billion—while our industrial production of goods to buy has less than doubled. Result: Cheaper money. Each dollar's proportionate worth in goods has fallen until it now takes 1.76 dollars to buy as much as one dollar would buy in 1939. Over three times as many dollars bidding frantically for less than twice as much goods equals inflation.

RUSSIANS:
Western Stand

Those who, in commenting on the strained relationship between the East and West, have been wont to say, "It'll get worse before it gets any better," probably had reached the end of their rhetorical rope.

For it was unlikely that it could get any worse without producing armed conflict of some kind. This, it appeared, was the top of the heap of crises that had been piling up for two years.

There were these developments:

THE AMERICAN, British and French ambassadors, who had been talking with Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov and Premier Stalin in Moscow for six weeks, left the Russian capital, presumably ending the four-power discussions.

THE THREE western powers asked the Kremlin for a simple and final "yes or no" on the question of whether Russia will lift its blockade of Berlin.

U. S. SECRETARY of State George Marshall, speaking before the U. N. general assembly, warned the Soviet Union that American patience should not be mistaken for weakness.

With the Moscow talks at an end the center of action in the crisis had shifted to Paris where the issue would be debated in the U. N.

The western nations—the U. S., France and Great Britain—plainly had had enough and were determined not to give another inch.

In an hour-long speech before parliament, British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin expressed his nation's determination: "We are firmly resolved to go on with our policy.

"I AM NOT SAYING by that that we are committed to war and all the other things that might ensue. We have not reached that stage yet."

Speaking to the United Nations in Paris, George Marshall, U. S. secretary of state, outlined the basic U. S. foreign policy in much the same manner as Bevin. The United States, he said, would not "compromise the essential principles" or "barter away the rights and freedoms of other peoples."

HOME OWNERS:
Record High

One of the most maddening of all the modern paradoxes is that while millions of American families are searching desperately for decent places to live, at the same time more American families own their own homes now than ever before in history.

About 49 per cent of the nation's non-farm families owned their homes at the beginning of this year, it has been revealed by a federal reserve board survey. That comes to a total of 18.5 million city and town families.

Although the survey did not take up farm families, the proportion of home owners among that group traditionally has been much higher than among city dwellers.

? Current Events ?

If you haven't been spending all your evenings taking the dog for a walk or fixing the hen house, chances are you've been reading about some of the events on which the following five questions are based. Can you answer them?

1. The United Nations general assembly recently convened in Paris for a 10 or 12-week fall session. What is the name of the elaborate building in which the assembly is meeting?

2. The American, British and French ambassadors who have been conferring with Molotov recently took their leave of Moscow. Can you name them?

3. This year, 16 years after he soared 10 miles into the stratosphere in a balloon, a Belgian scientist-explorer plans to plunge two miles under water to investigate the deep sea world. Who is he?

4. Who is the man who took the assassinated Count Bernadotte's place as U. N. mediator in Palestine?

5. Princess Elizabeth of England was in the world spotlight when she got married last November. Now she is in the news again for a different reason. What is it?

ANSWERS

1. Palais de Chaillot.
2. Walter Bedell Smith (U. S.), Frank Roberts (British), Yves Chataigneau (French).
3. Prof. Auguste Piccard.
4. Ralph Bunche, an American, Bernadotte's assistant.
5. She is expecting a baby in November.

PRICE AID:
Sure Thing

One thing is dead sure about the coming election: No matter who gets into office, farm price supports will be continued.

Governor Dewey is on record as favoring the Hope-Aiken law passed by congress last June, and President Truman says he is in favor of farm price supports and has been all along.

BOTH SIDES have promised their help to the nation's farmers.

As a result of the growing amount of light that has been shed upon the idea of price supports there has been a lot of argument as to whether they keep up costs of living in the city and, hence, contribute generally toward inflation.

The system was started in the 1930s to save farmers from bankruptcy caused by surplus production and lack of consumer buying. It accomplished that end.

IT WAS CHANGED during the war to make farmers produce more food than the country needed to feed less fortunate nations who were fighting the Axis. It did that.

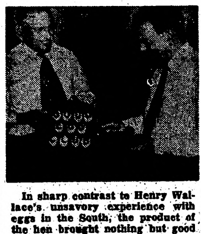
After the war this incentive system was continued to keep greater amounts of food flowing into destitute areas abroad. It was successful in that, also.

Now, however, as a result of this artificial stimulation, production is beginning to pile up in the U. S. The wartime pattern of price support no longer fits the American market.

THE POTATO situation is a case in point. As the government continues to stimulate the production of potatoes the guaranteed prices keep consumers from getting the surplus crops at bargain prices, and at the same time the system keeps farmers growing too many potatoes.

Congress this year elected to revise the price support program, effective in 1950, by providing new parity prices based on modern farm practices and by allowing a fluctuation in support levels to conform with general economic conditions.

Dewey and Eggs



In sharp contrast to Henry Wallace's unsavory experience with eggs in the South, the product of the hen brought nothing but good to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, GOP presidential candidate. At his Pawling, N. Y., farm he was made honorary member of the national "Good Egg" club and was presented with an egg-bedecked plaque by Hobart Creighton (left), GOP nominee for governor of Indiana and president of the Poultry and Egg national board.

ANSWER MAN:
Brannan

When it comes to questions Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan gets all kinds, many of which have nothing to do with farming.

Pouring in at the rate of 3,000 a day, the queries vary from: "How do I bury cats in the ground?" to "What was Little Eva's last name in the play, 'Uncle Tom's Cabin?'" and "Can you recommend a lonely hearts club? Three of us girls are interested."

THERE'S NO EXCUSE

America's Rural Fire Loss Can Be Cut

Although fire prevention week is over for this year, the danger of farm fires is not over and possibly never will be.

But that seeming inevitability is no excuse. As a matter of fact, fire protection experts say, there is no longer any excuse for America's 100-million-dollar annual farm fire loss.

The means to reduce it are available to almost any community that wants to make the effort.

Principal means of cutting rural fire losses, according to the National Board of Fire Underwriters, is a good volunteer fire department, quartered in a small town but serving the surrounding area that has been organized into a fire protection district, such as now is authorized in 39 states.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.
Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Washington Social Hours: Cold Turkey, Hot Gossip

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Washington cocktail parties and other social gatherings have been widely publicized as makers and breakers of reputations, national candidacies and international policies.

Not all of these affairs may forge or fracture the destiny of nations, but many often bring together as great a variety of human ingredients as are to be found at any one place at any one time, anywhere.

For example I have just returned from lunch. I probably should say "luncheon" considering what it must have cost my red-headed college mate host whose excuse for giving it was the fact that he was celebrating his 55th birthday but whose real reasons lay beyond distant frontiers. The bearded Italian scientist on his left reminded him that the occasion was unique because it was hardly likely he would celebrate a similar occasion 55 years hence.

BAUKHAGE

A little macabre, I thought, but no one seemed to take it that way—least of all the fellow-citizen of Dante who was enjoying himself immensely over his cold smoked turkey and doubtless became lyric over the lira and other important transalpine institutions before we were through.

On the bearded one's left was a representative of the state department who gave me a disappointingly eye-witness and unsensational account of the recent parliament session of one of our South American neighbors—a session which I had judged from previous dispatches, would be punctuated by revolver shots.

We had heard rumors of mysterious shootings there which were supposed to have made up in political significance what they lacked in marksmanship. Also there had been hints of cabinet changes due not only to mistakes in policy, but to hasty burials. I asked my fellow guest about it.

"Oh, no," he said, "there were no cabinet changes."

"But what about these terrible rumors of graft and corruption?"

"Well, the President in his address did make particular reference to the evils of political corruption and to the importance of selfless loyalty on the part of the servants of the state."

"But was that all?" I persisted. "No names, addresses, or telephone numbers?"

"That was all," he insisted, "It was a very quiet session. Furthermore there was none of the protocol we observe at a joint session of the two houses of the American congress. This parliament was called to order, the President came in, spoke his piece, and went out."

At this point, my host broke in. He insisted that I repeat the story of the opening of this summer's special "turnip" session of congress which nobody outside of a few million radio listeners who happened to be tuned in had heard before.

Legislative Faux Pas, De Luxe Style

This July 26 when a very angry house of representatives was called to order, it was known that the regular chaplain could not appear. So, when a stranger took the rostrum, the less-somnolent members rose, bowed their heads, as is the custom, to listen to the prayer. The first words they heard resounding through the chamber were: "Whereas the public interest requires that the congress of the United States should be convened at 12 o'clock noon on Monday, the twenty-sixth of July, 1948, to receive such communication as may be made by the Executive; Now, therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States . . ." and so on. . . .

Gradually the members realized that the man addressing them was not the substitute for the absent chaplain of the house, but the substitute for the equally-absent reading clerk whose duty it is to read bills and official communications.

It was most embarrassing. The voice they were hearing was not the voice of a man repeating the word of God; it was the voice of the substitute clerk repeating the proclamation of the man at whom they were maddest. The members didn't like to make public admission of their error by sitting down, and so they had to stand through the painful 114-word pronouncement which had torn them from the bosom of family and constituency, and brought them back to heat-ridden Washington.

Next to the state department official who had unwittingly provided the excuse for my anecdote, was the consul-general of the Philippine republic who happens to be the son of another college classmate of mine. He, like the rest of his family, had outlived the Japanese occupation, and with his sister, had participated in the effective Philippine underground, memories of which made this day's current tragedy of the Philippines—the eruption of Hibokhibok volcano on Camiquin island—a decidedly minor concern.

On my left was a prominent Washington lawyer. During a lull in the discussion of international, if not cosmic affairs, he suddenly asked: "What was your mother's maiden name?"

"Alice Blood," I replied.

"Yes," he nodded in satisfaction, "My aunt, Clara Brown, often told me about your mother. They were classmates (Ingham university '78), and she was a bridesmaid at your mother's wedding in La Salle, Illinois."

Skipping your correspondent around the table, we arrive at a famous scientist. We exchanged reminiscences too, for he also was a graduate of the same college. As we talked, I remembered an anecdote about him I had heard from a mutual college friend.

A Check by Any Other Name . . .

Not many years after his graduation, this scientist and his young wife arrived in the city where our mutual friend was in business, and called on him. The businessman recognized the scientist's face immediately but for the life of him couldn't remember the man's name.

During their lunch, the scientist remarked that he was going on an extended trip into Canada and had unfortunately run out of money. He wondered could he get a check cashed at the businessman's bank. The businessman gladly acquiesced, thinking that when he saw the signature on the check, he would recognize the scientist's name. Together they went to the bank, the scientist wrote the check, and the two men went to the cashier's window. But as the scientist handed in the check, all the businessman could read was the name of a bank in a very distant city and the amount—five hundred dollars.

He had already said to the cashier, "I want you to meet my friend . . ." but could get no further. Terribly embarrassed, he turned to the scientist and said: "I'm sorry, but I can't recall your name.

Of course the cashier overheard this remark and with the natural caution of the banker, said to the businessman: "This will be fine, Mr. X, but will you please endorse this?" Mr. X turned it over, noted the name but did not recognize it, trembled to think of what would happen to his bank account if it bounced (and he was sure it would), and signed. Farewells were spoken, the scientist departed. Day after day the businessman awaited the call from the bank.

In fact, he told me he had picked out a space on the wall where he intended to frame the paper so that he could call attention to it casually, should some other vaguely identified caller request a similar favor.

Nothing happened.

A month or so later, another college friend came to town. The businessman related the story, describing the scientist and his occupation. Unaccountably his listener burst into laughter.

"Didn't you know," he said between gasps, "That man's technical as well as scientific information which he acquired at school along with his Ars Magister made him a cool million the year after he was graduated?"

At the luncheon there was also a Chinese oil expert who merely listened, and an ERP representative who left early.

And now back to my red-headed host. He related the adventure of one of the guests who had been unable to appear. It seems this gentleman had formed a corporation called "World Development, Inc." or something very similar. When my host heard his glowing prospectus, he said, "Aren't you covering a lot of ground."

"Oh, no," said the promoter who since had acquired considerable influence in international affairs, "this is just a subsidiary of the Inter-Planetary corporation."

Then I had to go, so I never knew what master-plan for the rebuilding and exploiting of the nation, the world or the sidereal spaces were discussed or consummated. But I have no doubt you can go a long way in Washington—starting with cold turkey.

Proposed AMENDMENTS to the CONSTITUTION of MINNESOTA

J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General
State Capitol
St Paul 1, Minn.

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your request asking me to furnish you with a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 639.

This chapter of the 1947 laws proposes an amendment to Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution of Minnesota. This section of the Constitution authorizes the state to levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state. As the Constitution now reads, it provides that two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund provided for in Section 2 of Article XVI of the State Constitution, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to change these provisions for the distribution of the proceeds of such tax so as to provide that one-half of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund and one-half thereof shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund.

The effect of the proposed amendment is to reduce the proportion of the proceeds of such tax which shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund from two-thirds to one-half and increase the proportion thereof which shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund from one-third to one-half.

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640.

Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640, proposes an amendment to Article XIV, Section 1, of the Constitution of Minnesota. The Constitution now provides that:

"Whenever a majority of both houses of the legislature shall deem it necessary to alter or amend this Constitution, they may propose such alterations or amendments, which proposed amendments shall be published with the laws which have been passed at the same session, and said amendments shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection at any general election, and if it shall appear, in a manner to be provided by law, that a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for and ratified such alterations or amendments, the same shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution. If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

The purpose of the amendment proposed by said Laws 1947, Chapter 640, is to eliminate from Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution as it now reads the following words, to-wit:

"If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution, as now worded, requires that if two or more proposed amendments are submitted at the same election they shall be so submitted that the voters may vote for or against each separately. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate that requirement. The effect of its adoption would be to make it possible for the legislature to submit two or more proposed alterations or amendments to the State Constitution at the same time in such form that a voter thereon shall be required to vote for or against all of them as a group and not on each separately.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 641.

Laws 1947, Chapter 641, proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota, Article XIV, Section 2.

Said Article XIV, Section 2, now reads as follows:

"Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature shall think it necessary to call a convention to revise this Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote at the next general election for members of the legislature, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for a convention, the legislature shall, at their next session, provide by law for calling the same. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner, and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

If the amendment is adopted, said Article XIV, Section 2, would read as follows:

"Two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature may provide by law for calling a convention to revise this Constitution. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

Under the present provisions of the Constitution, the calling of a convention to revise it requires that the legislature, by a vote of two thirds of the members of each House, shall submit to the voters of the state at the next general election the question as to whether such convention shall be called by the legislature at its next session.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the requirement of a vote on the question by the voters of the state and to authorize, without such vote, two thirds of the members of each House to provide by law for calling such a convention.

The effect of the proposed amendment to Article XIV, Section 2, of the State Constitution, is to transfer the power to call a convention to revise the State Constitution from the electors expressing their will by a majority of all the electors voting at said election to two thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement of the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 642.

This law proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article to be known as Article XX of the Constitution. The proposed amendment to be known as Article XX would read as follows:

"Section 1. The state may at any time pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946; may levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose; and if and whenever authorized, and in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the Legislature, may expend monies, may contract debts, may issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and may pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor. The provisions of section 5 of Article 9 of the Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes.

"Sec. 2. Repealing inconsistent provisions. Any and all provisions of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the Legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of the proposed amendment to the State Constitution which would be known as Article XX thereof is to empower the state at any time to pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946. It will also empower the state to levy taxes and appropriate for such purpose, and, in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the legislature, to expend monies, contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and to pledge the public credit, to provide money for such adjusted compensation. The proposed amendment will expressly provide that the provisions of Article IX, Section 5, of the State Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of the proposed Article XX and that the purposes for which the credit may be given or loaned thereunder are declared to be public purposes.

The effect of the proposed amendment will be to empower the legislature to enact the legislation necessary to provide for the payment of an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period therein designated, to levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose, to contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness and pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor.

Further, the proposed amendment would remove the restrictions, if any, in Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution, relating to the expenditure of public money and the contracting of public debts for the purposes stated, and would declare that the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned in pursuance of the amendment are public purposes.

The proposed amendment would also repeal any provisions of the Constitution of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of the amendment.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Get The Truth!

Called on my good friend "Cappy" Miller, who edits the County Bee, the other day. And hanging up on the wall of Cappy's office is this slogan for his paper:

"Remember there are two sides to every question. Get both sides. Be truthful."

A good slogan . . . .not just for a newspaper—for people, too. Because there'll always be two sides to every question: the side of those who vote one way, and those who vote another—the side of those who enjoy a temperate beverage like beer or ale, and of those who swear by nothing but cider.

And from where I sit, once you've got both sides—and faced them truthfully, you realize that these differences of opinion are a precious part of what we call Democracy—the right of the individual to vote as he believes, to speak his mind, to choose his own beverage of moderation, whether beer or cider.

Johnson-Lorentson

Miss Elayne Doris Johnson, daughter of Carl Johnson and Dale Theodore Lorentson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Lorentson of Erskine, Minnesota spoke their marriage vows at a simple single ring ceremony at the Carl Johnson home late Sunday afternoon October 10, 1948.

Rev. Ernest J. Vick officiated at the single ring service in the presence of immediate relatives. Joyce Peterson sang "I Love You Truly." The home was beautifully decorated with bouquets of cut flowers.

For her marriage the bride chose a grey suit and wore a corsage of pink roses and white carnations. She was attended by her sister Joyce Johnson wearing a grey suit with a corsage of yellow chrysanthemums.

Roy Johnson, cousin of the bride, attended the groom as best man. Mrs. Rose Christenson grandmother of the bride and Mrs. Sam Lorentson, the grooms mother, were attired in dark dresses with corsages of red roses and white cornations.

Following the ceremony a reception was held, the table at which the bridal party was seated had a two tiered wedding cake topped by a miniature bride and groom and its centerpiece of lighted candlebra and bouquets of flowers made the dining room festive for the occasinn.

The groom is employed at the Coast to Coast Store at Thief River Falls. After a short wedding trip they will make their home at Holt.

Mrs. L. C. Lindberg and Debra Louise, and Mrs. Hanson visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Torrance Lillevold near Grygla Tuesday evening the occasion being the latters birthday. Others present were Mrs. Manley Anderson and children and Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Lillevold of Grygla.

Cars for Everybody

Most people thought Henry Ford's ideas about putting wheels under every American were just a lot of bunko. They just couldn't see how anything like that could be done. Some of Ford's early partners failed to grasp the idea, for they thought of automobiles as belonging to the rich. Ford's idea was too "harebrained" for them. They couldn't understand how anybody could possibly make a living selling cars to "poor" people.

But Henry Ford had the grain of an idea and the courage to see it through. America was a nation that encouraged such things. With an original investment of $28,000, he put the nation literally on wheels. Mass production was brought into its own, and costs came down. Ford wanted to make only a small profit on each car, and this sold millions of them. Competitors had to offer good values, too.

Jobs and Payrolls

Tin Lizzie and her imitators called for roads. Dozens of new industries came into being, in the building of roads. Our highways would circle the globe 41 times. Lizzie and the others had a thirst for gasoline. America's petroleum industry grew enormously. Filling stations had to quench that thirst. All these things made jobs. America became an industrial power, with this Ford-inspired motive power all the while adding to her efficiency and activity.

This new mass production created great industrial empires; mines for coal and iron, rubber plantations, timberlands and saw mills, hydroelectric works, chemicals, glass, textiles. The result was more and more jobs, bigger and bigger payrolls, more and more goods and products that people wanted. Then, with our cars we became a touring nation. All our states became neighbors. We came to know the face of America, the beautiful.

Plowed-Back Earnings

Out of that $28,000 and his idea, Ford developed a great industrial empire, with factories and assembly plants and branch offices. Yet, aside from the factories and the equipment that he owned, Henry Ford probably never owned more than 2 per cent of the wealth that he created. He was called a billionaire, but he counted his resources in buildings and machinery, not in money.

Ford was free to plow back his earnings into an industrial empire that created jobs and produced wealth, mostly for other people. There were no personal income taxes to penalize individual effort. In fact, corporation taxes did not begin until Ford's industry was five years old, and then the tax was only 1 per cent. It did not exceed 13 per cent any year until 1932. Today, taxes are a multi-million dollar item on many a company's books.

Any More Henry Fords?

Demands from the tax collector have made impossible a contribution like Ford's from any individual American in this generation. Present tax laws, and mushrooming growth of a revenue-taking government, make it almost certain that there will not be another Henry Ford, or anyone like him. Are we thus penalizing the future of America? Who knows what need may arise for the genius of a Ford, in years to come?

Our nation must never lose its inventive genius. This genius can best thrive in a climate of complete economic freedom. The spirit of industrial venture that Ford typified must be kept alive, for the good of America. Ford's contribution brought untold blessings to all of us. We should not make it impossible, through heavy taxation burdens, for any future Henry Fords to develop in America.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Western Allies Place Berlin Issue Before U.N. as Negotiations Fail; Two Unions Barred From A-Plants

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

'BLACK FURY':

Peace Threat

There was no war in sight, yet the East-West situation was starkly dangerous.

It was dangerous for the United States, Great Britain, France and Russia—and for the United Nations which now had to thrust its hands into the tangled skein of diplomatic threads and try to straighten out the snarls.

PRACTICALLY no optimism existed among U. N. delegations in Paris. There was no reason for any.

The United States, Britain and France had broken off negotiations with Russia over blockaded Berlin and referred the issue to the U. N. security council as a threat to peace.

No hint of appeasement appeared in the western nations' attitude. They said they would reserve to themselves the full right to take whatever measures were necessary to maintain their position in Berlin while referring the case to the U. N.

BRITISH FOREIGN Secretary Ernest Bevin told the U. N. general assembly that Russia would be to blame if a "black fury," the incalculable disaster of atomic war," strikes the world.

Immediate cause of this inflamed condition in Europe was the blatant bad faith exercised by the Soviets during the 58-day series of talks in Moscow between the three western ambassadors and Stalin and Molotov.

After the three ambassadors, Smith of the U. S., Roberts of England and Chataigneau of France, had left the Soviet capital the western allies made public a 24,000-word "white paper" charging the Russians with welching on a secret agreement by Stalin to lift the Berlin blockade.

WHEN THE western nations discovered the disillusioning fact that Russia was literally trying to pull a fast one in order to gain control of Berlin, further direct negotiation was patently useless. Thus, the issue was turned over to the security council.

Not that anyone hoped the security council would be able to take any effective action. The Russian veto probably would nullify any efforts it might make.

MOTIVES:

Russian

Washington believes the crisis centering in Berlin will continue at fever pitch at least until next spring —provided it does not explode into total war before then.

It is a bad outlook, of course, from the U. S. viewpoint. But for the Russians the coming six months loom as a golden opportunity to expand their power in Europe and throughout the world.

THEY WILL be able to do this, they believe, because American efforts and sentiment will be divided and weakened by the election campaign.

Official Soviet attitude is that American leaders will be so immersed in domestic affairs that they will be able to give only a fraction of their time to consideration of international developments.

That's why the Russians are trying to shoot the works now. It is why they saw fit to make the virtually impossible demand for control of all traffic—land, air and water—between Berlin and western Germany as one of the conditions for lifting the blockade which has throttled the German capital since June.

WHAT IS IT the Russians want so badly that they are willing to risk an atomic war to get?

Briefly, they want to get the U. S. out of Europe, and that means nothing else but that they want to control Europe themselves.

The Kremlin, some time ago, rejected a proposal that Russia and the western allies stabilize their military and political positions roughly along the lines that existed immediately after the war.

ACCORDING TO the Russian plan for domination of Europe, that arrangement would be no good because the Soviets fear the West would gain and they would lose too much.

With American help, western Europe could consolidate and strengthen its position and possibly prosper to the extent that Russia's situation in the East would be endangered. Moreover, the Soviet satellites, influenced by a free and thriving West, would be difficult to control.

IN THE RUSSIAN mind it follows, then, that America must be driven out, the European recovery program destroyed and the whole of Europe reduced to such a state of disorder and poverty that it would be unable to resist Russian demands.

Futility Unlimited

These are the three western ambassadors to Russia who engaged in six weeks of rigorous but unavailing diplomatic fencing with Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov on the subject of Germany and the Berlin blockade. They were able to accomplish nothing and finally left Moscow to report to the heads of their respective governments. Left to right are: Yves Chataigneau, France; Walter Bedell Smith, U. S., and Frank Roberts, Great Britain.

Bill Collector

Russia, the only nation that has not closed its lend-lease account with the U. S., has been asked to pay up pronto.

The state department, in a new note, called upon the Soviets to resume negotiations for settling its long overdue lend-lease account of 11 billion dollars.

News of the action was kept secret for two weeks for fear of upsetting the delicate Berlin discussions.

ANYTHING NEW

Cooler Crisis

HOTTEST QUESTION of the month in Washington for a while was not "Who will win the election?" It was not "Will we get into war?"

It was a question of who ordered 96 gleaming, new 1948 model refrigerators installed in the offices of every one of the United States senators.

Government workers were busily engaged in clamping the refrigerators to the office floors (at an estimated cost of well above $10,000) before anybody thought to ask who had conceived this ingenious scheme.

THE PROJECT called for moving refrigerators into the offices of senators who never before had had them and putting new ones into those senatorial sanctums that already were equipped with old ones.

It was a clear case of higher standards of living for solons.

Senate appropriations committee staff-members denied they had approved any appropriation for senatorial refrigerators, said furthermore that there was no record of any such appropriation.

RANKING NEXT to the riddle of who put the refrigerators there was the question of why a senator should need a refrigerator in the first place.

Somebody said maybe they were intended to replace the pigeonhole as convenient spots to keep legislation proposed by the President on ice.

NO ATOMS:

Two Unions

Morally afraid of skulduggery at the atomic crossroads, the government has acted to bar unions whose officers refuse to take the non-Communist oath from its atom bomb plants.

SPECIFICALLY, the atomic energy commission issued an order telling two CIO unions to keep out of atomic installations — the CIO United Electric Workers and the CIO United Public Workers.

The action came on the heels of congressional charges that a network of Soviet spy rings tried during the war to dig up atomic secrets.

Also, the atomic energy commission said, other unions from now on will be recognized officially as qualified to work in atom plants only if they can qualify for certification by the national labor relations board.

Said David E. Lilienthal, chairman of the commission, all atomic energy facilities must be operated "in a manner best calculated to assure that those who participate in the program are loyal to the United States.

ACTUALLY, UNION activity in all atomic plants, with the exception of the one at Oak Ridge, has been curtailed sharply since the atomic bomb project was launched. Nevertheless a number of unions have tried to keep active in the hope that the curbs on union organizational work would be eased in the future.

A congressional committee had heard testimony from a self-described former Communist that the United Electrical Workers was "the largest Communist - dominated organization in the United States."

First Automobile

It was in 1892 that C. E. Duryea drove the first gasoline-powered automobile in the United States. Fifty years later the U. S. government terminated all civilian production of motor cars because of the war. In that 50 years more than 86 million vehicles had been produced.

Fall Fertilization Ups Alfalfa Yields, Adds to Life Span

CHICAGO—Holding a deep, long-wearing carpet of alfalfa on rolling fields is a matter of liming, keeping the plant's dinner pail well filled with phosphate and potash, and following pasture management methods that prevent premature "baldness," declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Long life for alfalfa stands depends on good nutrition and cultural proctices," says the statement. "When the plants are well fed they are hardier and better able to resist diseases and winter killing.

"Like other deep-rooted legumes, alfalfa takes large helpings of phosphate and potash out of the soil. Agronomists recommend that heavy amounts of fertilizer carrying these nutrients be applied at the time of seeding. The life of the alfalfa can be prolonged and yields increased by top-dressing with phosphate and potash in the fall.

The committee cautions farmers "not to gamble" on the life-span of their alfalfa stands.

"Keep them thick and vigorous," it says. "Then they won't run down when you least expect it.

"Go easy on grazing until stands are well established. Follow a rotation plan so cows will move from one field to another, before the pasture is grazed down."

Will Stratovision Arrive? They're Working on It Now

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"Is television here to stay?"

That has been the favorite crack in AM (regular broadcasting) circles for some time. Now it's been displaced by another:

"Will stratovision arrive?"

If it doesn't, say the enthusiastic startospheric promoters, millions of people in rural areas will be unable to receive television programs for years, if ever.

BAUKHAGE

What is "it"?

"The stratovision system simply puts the antennae and television transmitter in an ariplane flying in lazy circles above the earth," they explain, "and the shortwave sent out from this airborne antennae blankets the earth's surface like a great inverted ice cream cone and covers an area approximately 500 miles across."

Since television waves travel in a straight line and not in high, leaping loops like long-wave radio, their range is limited, just as human sight is limited. You can't see nearly as far on a level city street as you can from the top of a mountain. That parallel isn't an exact one, but it's a good rough comparison.

So television waves have to travel on a special cable underneath the ground (co-axial cable), or else leap from one high tower to another (microwave relay). And the farthest they can travel is some 35 to 50 miles. But stratovision waves come from a transmitter as high as the plane carrying the transmitter can fly, 30,000 feet, we'll say.

What about storms? Well the stratospherites say they miss most of them at that height, and anyhow, they can use more than one equipped plane, so they can shift the point of transmission of a program from one to the other and thus dodge the storm. They insist that they have already demonstrated that this is possible, that they can deliver.

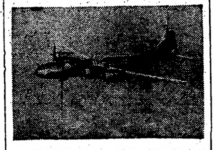
I haven't seen any of the recent tests so I don't know. Naturally the oldtimers (although the oldest oldtimers in television are still pretty new) are skeptical. After a test held recently in Zanesville, Ohio, for the benefit of newspaper and radio folk, many were still skeptical. It was admitted that conditions on the test day were not ideal by any means and it was claimed that there was interference from other stations which would be eliminated.

Variety magazine's correspondent, a keen observer of radio, said:

"Demonstration proved that the higher the altitude, the clearer and more extensive the pick-up. For all practical purposes, though, the specific, physical certainty of the underground co-axial or the thru-the-air microwave relay would seem to have the networking edge for the time being."

("Be not the first by whom the new is tried. . . .")

The backers of the new system, Westinghouse Radio Stations, Incorporated, think differently. Their request for a commercial license was turned down by the FCC last month but they expect requirements to be altered.



This is the experimental stratovision station—a modified B-29, flying at an altitude of 25,000 feet.

Glenn Martin, whose aircraft company thought enough of the idea to work out the developments of the aviation end said:

"Flying the transmitter is one of the greatest single advances in the history of television."

I talked with one of the very earnest young men who are attempting to convert the skeptics. He seemed to have no doubts that the method equalled any other. In fact he thought that competitors would fight it because it was so good.

The whole thing is a young man's idea. He is C. E. (Chili) Nobles, 30-year-old radar expert whose work in that field was a valuable wartime contribution. He is a Texan (hence the nickname, I suppose) and the story is that the idea first struck him when he was flying a plane high above his home.

As he ran over the various figures which were in the back of his mind, the number of miles his home was from the nearest big city, the altitude and the various other calculations formulae, logarithms and assorted humorous material, which an electronic engineer toys with instead of reciting limericks to himself to pass away the time, he suddenly thought:

"If I only had a television transmitter with me, and my folks had a set, and if I had some other planes for relays, they could get the same television programs New York does."

"I suppose long hours of intense work on military radar had so crowded my mind with details of its operation that I looked for radar possibilities in everything I saw," the young stratovision creator said afterward. "Radio already had proven its adaptability and value for airplane communications and in navigational aids, including blind flying. Turning these facts over mentally, I concluded that Westinghouse already had at hand basic engineering information which seemed to justify the ambitious plan."

He sold the idea to Westinghouse and Glenn Martin and they went ahead and backed his extensive, not to say expensive, experimentation.

C. E. Nobles, originator of the stratovision airborne television system, is shown at the twin video monitoring boards in the experimental stratovision plane.

I caught some of the enthusiasm which I know "Chili" must radiate from the young man who sat across the table from me explaining the drawings.

"Think of what stratovision would mean to the readers of your column," he said.

"We only asked for a license for one station but with more we could link up the Pacific and Atlantic coasts so that we could pick up Hollywood and New York studios (I don't know why he left out Chicago) with only eight planes flying 400 miles apart. By adding six planes to the system to cover the Northwest and Southeast we could serve 78 per cent of the population!"

And once we got the rural televisers looking, I thought, what a lot of new material would be put into the telecasts to say nothing of the greatly broadened market for television sets and advertising which would be created.

The first stratovision experiments established the surprising fact that there were lots of television sets in areas which could not possibly be reached ordinarily (by co-axial cable or microwave). At the first call for response to the test programs many letters came from such areas. Probably amateurs who had built their own sets, and perhaps erected their own antennae on some high elevation.

It would seem that the country is willing to try the Nobles experiment if it gets the chance.

Aging is shown in body cells in several ways. Many people shrink with age. Others will put on bulk with the years. Those who shrink live longer. And this is the reason. Instead of shrinking, some cells may collect and store up dull, inert material like calcium, the little brown granules in the cells of the heart, and especially fat. This kind of aging causes more trouble than quiet shrinking. Aging is well on its way when fatty substances collect in the cells and in the arteries, particularly in their inside lining. This is one form of hardening of the arteries.

Proposed AMENDMENTS to the CONSTITUTION of MINNESOTA

J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General
State Capitol
St Paul 1, Minn.

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your request asking me to furnish you with a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 639.

This chapter of the 1947 laws proposes an amendment to Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution of Minnesota. This section of the Constitution authorizes the state to levy an excise tax upon any substance, material, fluid, force or other means or instrumentality, or the business of dealing in, selling or producing any or all thereof, used or useful, in producing or generating power for propelling motor or other vehicles used on the public highways of this state. As the Constitution now reads, it provides that two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund provided for in Section 2 of Article XVI of the State Constitution, and one-third thereof in the state road and bridge fund. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to change these provisions for the distribution of the proceeds of such tax so as to provide that one-half of the proceeds of such tax shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund and one-half thereof shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund.

The effect of the proposed amendment is to reduce the proportion of the proceeds of such tax which shall be placed in the state trunk highway fund from two-thirds to one-half and increase the proportion thereof which shall be placed in the state road and bridge fund from one-third to one-half.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640.

Laws of Minnesota for 1947, Chapter 640, proposes an amendment to Article XIV, Section 1, of the Constitution of Minnesota. The Constitution now provides that:

"Whenever a majority of both houses of the legislature shall deem it necessary to alter or amend this Constitution, they may propose such alterations or amendments, which proposed amendments shall be published with the laws which have been passed at the same session, and said amendments shall be submitted to the people for their approval or rejection at any general election, and if it shall appear, in a manner to be provided by law, that a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for and ratified such alterations or amendments, the same shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of this Constitution. If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

The purpose of the amendment proposed by said Laws 1947, Chapter 640, is to eliminate from Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution as it now reads the following words, to-wit:

"If two or more alterations or amendments shall be submitted at the same time, it shall be so regulated that the voters shall vote for or against each separately."

Article XIV, Section 1, of the State Constitution, as now worded, requires that if two or more proposed amendments are submitted at the same election they shall be so submitted that the voters may vote for or against each separately. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate that requirement. The effect of its adoption would be to make it possible for the legislature to submit two or more proposed alterations or amendments to the State Constitution at the same time in such form that a voter thereon shall be required to vote for or against all of them as a group and not on each separately.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

January 14, 1948

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement showing the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 641.

Laws 1947, Chapter 641, proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota, Article XIV, Section 2.

Said Article XIV, Section 2, now reads as follows:

"Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature shall think it necessary to call a convention to revise this Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote at the next general election for members of the legislature, for or against a convention; and if a majority of all the electors voting at said election shall have voted for a convention, the legislature shall, at their next session, provide by law for calling the same. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner, and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

If the amendment is adopted, said Article XIV, Section 2, would read as follows:

"Two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature may provide by law for calling a convention to revise this Constitution. The convention shall consist of as many members as the House of Representatives, who shall be chosen in the same manner and shall meet within three months after their election for the purpose aforesaid."

Under the present provisions of the Constitution, the calling of a convention to revise it requires that the legislature, by a vote of two-thirds of the members of each House, shall submit to the voters of the state at the next general election the question as to whether such convention shall be called by the legislature at its next session.

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the requirement of a vote on the question by the voters of the state and to authorize, without such vote, two thirds of the members of each House to provide by law for calling such a convention.

The effect of the proposed amendment to Article XIV, Section 2, of the State Constitution, is to transfer the power to call a convention to revise the State Constitution from the electors expressing their will by a majority of all the electors voting at said election to two thirds of the members elected to each branch of the legislature.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
Dear Mr. Holm:

This letter is in reply to your communication requesting a statement of the purpose and effect of Laws 1947, Chapter 642.

This law proposes an amendment to the Constitution of Minnesota by adding thereto a new article to be known as Article XX of the Constitution. The proposed amendment to be known as Article XX would read as follows:

"Section 1. The state may at any time pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946; may levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose; and if and whenever authorized, and in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the Legislature, may expend monies, may contract debts, may issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and may pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor. The provisions of section 5 of Article 9 of the Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes.

"Sec. 2. Repealing Inconsistent provisions. Any and all provisions of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of this article are hereby repealed, so far, but only so far, as the same prohibit or limit the power of the Legislature to enact laws authorizing or permitting the doing of the things hereinbefore authorized."

The purpose of the proposed amendment to the State Constitution which would be known as Article XX thereof is to empower the state at any time to pay an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period from and including September 16, 1940, through December 30, 1946. It will also empower the state to levy taxes and appropriate for such purpose, and, in such amounts and on such terms as may be fixed by the legislature, to expend monies, contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness, or both, and to pledge the public credit, to provide money for such adjusted compensation. The proposed amendment will expressly provide that the provisions of Article IX, Section 5, of the State Constitution shall not apply to the provisions of the proposed Article XX and that the purposes for which the credit may be given or loaned thereunder are declared to be public purposes.

The effect of the proposed amendment will be to empower the legislature to enact the legislation necessary to provide for the payment of an adjusted compensation to persons who have served in the Armed Forces of the United States during the period therein designated, to levy taxes and appropriate monies for such purpose, to contract debts, issue and negotiate bonds or certificates of indebtedness and pledge the public credit, to provide money therefor.

Further, the proposed amendment would remove the restrictions, if any, in Article IX, Section 5, of the Constitution, relating to the expenditure of public money and the contracting of public debts for the purposes stated, and would declare that the purposes for which the credit of the state may be given or loaned in pursuance of the amendment are public purposes.

The proposed amendment would also repeal any provisions of the Constitution of Minnesota inconsistent with the provisions of the amendment.

Very truly yours,
J. A. A. BURNQUIST
Attorney General

How to Celebrate Your Wedding Anniversary

The "Dutch" Millers celebrated their Tin Wedding Anniversary Saturday. Everything had to be tin. Folks even ate off tin plates, and drank coffee out of tin cups.

When it was time to drink a toast to the "bride and groom," out came the final touch: ice cold beer in cans. And come the Millers' 15th anniversary (Glass) I expect we'll be toasting them with sparkling beer in bottles!

And I couldn't help thinking that there was a lesson for married folks in the way Dutch and his missus have got along together—in their policy of live-and-let-live, with never a criticism of each other's differences in taste.

From where I sit, it's due to two things: Temperance—as that moderate preference for beer suggests, and Tolerance—for their own differences of opinion—and for the tastes of others, whether applied to beer, to politics, or how to celebrate an anniversary.

U. S. S. Niagara

In a naval battle on Lake Erie during the war of 1812, Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry's flagship, "Lawrence," was shot away. The commodore transferred his flag in an open boat to the U.S.S. "Niagara" and turned the tide against the British. The "Niagara" later was sunk as obsolete under orders of the navy. In 1911, it was raised, rebuilt and taken for a tour of the Great Lakes, but sank in Misery Bay again. Under supervision of the Niagara memorial commission of Pennsylvania it was raised a second time and rebuilt.

Stienhauer-Johnson

Nazareth Lutheran Church was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday afternoon October 13 when Miss Evelyn Marcella Stienhauer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stienhauer, became the bride of Mr. Marvin Walter Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Johnson ot Erskine.

In the church which was artistically decorated with flowers and lighted tapers, the single ring ceremony was performed by Rev. V. G. Sorenson.

Miss Delores Sandberg played a 15 minute prelude of organ music.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father to the strains of Lohengrin's Bridal Chorus and was attired in a gown of white crepe back satin with net yoke, fitted bodice and long sleeves that came to a point at the wrist. She wore a fingertip veil and carried a bouquet of red roses and white chrysanthemums and white streamers. Her only jewelry was a gold locket, a gift from the groom.

The bride's attendants were Miss Agnes Johnson, sister of the groom, maid of honor, who wore a blue gown and Yvonne Haagenson, cousin of the bride, bridesmaid wearing a pale green gown. They carried bouquets of red rose buds and chrysanthemums with long streamers.

Truman Johnson, brother of groom, was best man and Clifford Stienhauer, the bride's brother also attended.

The usherers were Donald Stienhauer and Roy Johnson brothers of the bride and groom. They wore white carnation buttonaires.

Miss Lila Johnson, cousin of the groom sang O, Perfect Love and while the couple were kneeling at the Altar she sang The Lord's Prayer.

The bride's mother was attired in brown and the grooms mother in green. Both wore corsages of rosebuds and yellow chrysanthemums. Wearing a black dress and a corsage of white chrysanmums, the bride's grandmother, Mrs Elise Lunke was present.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church parlors for about 70 relatives and close friends. A three tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom served as centerpiece for the bridal table. Bouquets of carnations and petunias and tall white tapers also decorated the table.

Miss Lila Johnson sang "Blest Be The Tie That Binds" accompanied by Miss Delores Sandberg at the piano. Miss Eileen Larson had charge of the guest book. They wore formals and corsages. Mrs. Simon Moe had charge of the displaying of the gifts. Mrs. Lloyd Haagenson poured and the wedding cake was served by Mrs. Pearl Johnson. Also serving were Mrs. C. O. Larson, Mrs. L. M. Larson and Mrs. R. S. Wagner.

Guests from a distance included Mrs. Simon Moe, Mrs. R. N. Hoad, Mrs. Joe Pulaski, Mrs. Annie Christopherson. Mrs. W. Wagner all of Duluth; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stienhauer, Mr. and Mrs. R. Schulthorp and family, Arno Stienhauer, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hagman and family and Mrs. R. S. Wagner all from Thief River Falls; Mrs. Pearl Johnson of Mentor; Mr. and Mrs Leo Johnson of McIntosh and Mr and Mrs. Bennie Johnson and family of Bemidji.

The groom is engaged in farming near Erskine and after a honeymoon trip to California, they will make their home on his farm there,

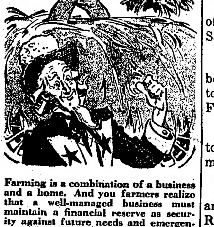
Uncle Sam Says



Farming is a combination of a business and a home. And you farmers realize that a well-managed business must maintain a financial reserve as security against future needs and emergencies. This reserve is built up during the good years, like this one, when many crops are the biggest in history. It must be in the safest possible form and always available. Nothing meets these requirements so well as U. S. Savings Bonds. You know that Savings Bonds provide more security than cash because they will be replaced if lost or stolen and they also bear interest, paying $4 for every $3 invested, in ten years.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Security Council Gets Berlin Issue, Inconclusive Meeting Stalls Action; Russia Proposes Big Four Parley

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEBATE:
Inconclusive

For better or for worse the U. N. security council had become wedded to the problem of what to do about Berlin, but there was no honeymoon.

Russia had boycotted the security council debate, and although Andrei Vishinsky, Soviet delegate, attended the first meeting in body he remained monstrously aloof from the proceedings in spirit.

THAT FIRST session was not only inconclusive but downright dull. No one would have thought that the 11 men mulling over this world crisis in the Chaillot palace in Paris were engaged in deliberations of so momentous a nature that they might turn the balance for peace or war in the world.

While Vishinsky sat dourly and silently—playing the part of the vicarious witness to the hilt — the American and French delegates read polite tirades against the manners and morals of Soviet motives and politics.

WHEN THE TWO western speakers were done, Juan A. Bramuglia of Argentina, acting president of the council, was forced simply to drop the whole business, temporarily at least, with a hollow thud.

After the French delegate had completed his review, Bramuglia waited expectantly for a time, then observed mildly that since he didn't seem to have any more speakers on the list the meeting would be recessed.

It appeared probable that the delegates would take considerable time for studying the charges of the U. S., Great Britain and France against Russia before meeting again. There was a possibility, too, that the security council might delay further formal meditation on the off chance that Russia might lift the Berlin blockade and the Big Four foreign ministers might take up the entire German question.

BIG FOUR:
More Talks?

Russia, whether the Kremlin admitted it or not, was dissatisfied with the way its pet Berlin situation was being handled. The Soviets wanted it out of the hands of the U. N. and in the hands of the Big Four foreign ministers.

EVEN WHILE the United Nations was deciding to discuss the issue, Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov was sending a note to the U. S., Britain and France urging that the four foreign ministers meet to consider both the Berlin crisis and the problem of Germany as a whole.

It was a peculiar development, inasmuch as it set the western nations to wondering how the Soviets could justify such a conference in view of their flagrant defection in the long, futile and disillusioning Moscow talks which had ended recently.

Molotov's note, however, claimed that the U. N. security council did not have the authority to deal either with the Berlin crisis or the overall subject of Germany.

REVIEWING the six weeks of negotiations in Moscow, the note said that the talks did not break down over a Russian demand for control of all air traffic in and out of Berlin, as the allies had contended.

All that Russia wanted, said Molotov, was some control over air transport to prevent black market money deals.

U. S. Ambassador Bedell Smith had agreed with that condition, Molotov insisted, and quoted him as saying: "It is quite understandable the Soviet government wishes to have certain guarantees against utilization of air transport for illegal currency deals or black market operations. Satisfactory guarantees of such kind could easily be secured."

IF SMITH'S statement is correct, Molotov reasoned, then the Soviet Union believes it is possible an agreement may be reached between the four powers on "a mutually satisfactory basis."

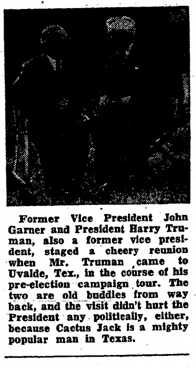
Anyway, Molotov continued righteously, he couldn't see what all the fuss was about. He claimed there was no blockade of Berlin, adding that the "defensive, protective measure" did not threaten international peace and security.

One More Alliance

Sen. Chan Gurney (R., S. D.) chairman of the senate armed services committee, has proposed a formal military alliance that would pledge the U. S. to fight if the nations of western Europe were to be attacked by Russia.

He announced that he would ask the next congress to approve his proposed alliance and to back it up with a new lend-lease program to help rearm western powers.

Ex 'Vice' Twice



Former Vice President John Garner and President Harry Truman, also a former vice president, staged a cheery reunion when Mr. Truman came to Uvalde, Tex., in the course of his pre-election campaign tour. The two are old buddies from way back, and the visit didn't hurt the President any politically, either, because Cactus Jack is a mighty popular man in Texas.

INFLATION:
What Price Bread?

Ever since the price of wheat declined under the impetus of this year's bumper crop a good many inflation-harried Americans have been asking when the price of bread was going to take a corresponding drop.

The answer is that it probably won't, and the reason is that although the price of wheat is down the cost of the other basic bread ingredients are not.

BAKING INDUSTRY leaders, in a considerable ferment over recent charges that bread prices are deliberately being kept aloft, have said—and with some justification—that the present costs of bakery goods reflect "a remarkable achievement in resisting inflationary pressures."

They base this contention on bureau of labor statistics figures which show, among other things, that the baker today is paying $2.53 for the four major ingredients of bread that cost him $1.00 in 1939.

THAT FIGURES out to an increase of 153 per cent in the cost of raw materials; yet the American housewife is paying on the average only about 63 per cent more for her bread than during the 1935-39 base period used by the bureau of labor statistics in computing its cost-of-living index.

Last November, BLS figures show, flour reached a record of 164 per cent over the base period, and in December wheat of the type used for bread flour hit a record high of 214 per cent over the base. And although flour and wheat prices have slid somewhat recently, the flour used in bread now on the grocers' shelves was purchased by the baker several weeks ago when prices were up.

OF THE FOUR major bread ingredients—flour, sugar, shortening and milk—only sugar now has a lower BLS index than bread.

And still another factor which has the bread-makers beside themselves singing in the wilderness is the mounting costs of other elements involved in producing the staff of life—such as labor, machinery, distribution and packaging.

Any way you slice it, it's still inflation.

ASSISTANCE:
For President

Former President Herbert Hoover, who knows whereof he speaks when he dwells on the rigors of being the nation's chief executive, has a campaign under way now to add more members to the U. S. cabinet who could act as "operating vice presidents" assisting the president.

HOOVER IS chairman of the non-political government reorganization commission which will recommend additional cabinet members to act in that capacity.

He did not specify how many will be urged beyond the present nine-man cabinet, but members of his commission said the figure under consideration was three.

"Every president has recommended additions to the cabinet," said Hoover. "There are nearly 80 independent agencies of the government running around loose in addition to the nine cabinet departments."

Members of the commission have revealed that among the additional cabinet departments that have been considered—but not decided upon—is a social security department, including public health, public works and education. They are separate bureaus now.

THE REORGANIZATION commission, which is working on all angles of government reorganization, was appointed under an act of the last congress. President Truman appointed a third of the commission and the senate and house each named a third.

Turtles are Deaf

Scientists believe turtles to be totally deaf. To compensate for the lack of this sense, however, they are especially sensitive to vibrations which they receive through their shells.

First Juvenile Courts

First juvenile courts in the United States were not established until 1900. The hearings are private and informal. Most other countries have maintained juvenile courts since the early 20th century.

Beneficial Snakes

The house snake, erroneously believed by some to milk cows, is a king snake, a species which eats its poisonous relatives. It is immune to the venom of rattlesnakes and copperheads.

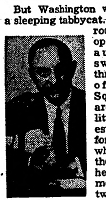
Parapsychology Could Do Just Fine on Election Bets

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—It won't be long now before you'll be able to settle those election bets.

A few days after the release of the official record of the negotiations with the Russians over the Berlin situation, I was sitting in the club with a couple of members of the Democratic administration. Talk had grown pretty tall in Paris and that morning, every other person I met, it seemed, asked me: are we going to have war?



BAUKHAGE

But Washington was as calm as a sleeping tabbycat. The club dining room window was open, and a lazy autumn sun sweeped down through the trees of the park. Squirrels loafed around, showing little or no interest in preparing for the winter, and when I repeated the question I had heard so often that morning to my two Democratic friends, it aroused very little interest. Said they: "The Russians want Dewey. So we won't have war now. The Soviets know if they started a war at this time, it would cinch Truman's election."

Naturally my friends didn't indicate that they had any doubts as to the outcome of the election, but when we started talking odds, I noticed the conversation was confined largely to the race for the senate. After all, said my friends, even some Republicans concede that Dewey might face a Democratic upper house.

It wouldn't take much of a push either way. The Democrats have 45 seats now, and the Republicans only 51. The Democrats are confident that only one or two of their candidates are in danger.

On the other hand, there are a number of stiff state fights in progress in which the Republicans are being pushed pretty hard. The Democrats feel that if they can get out a large vote in these uncertain states, they have a chance of winning the four seats that would give them the edge.

In other words the count then would be: Democrats 49; Republicans, 47. That two-vote margin wouldn't assure Democratic dominance on all senate policy matters, of course, because too many senators are given to leaping out of the party corral these days. On the other hand, many issues are bound to be settled along purely partisan lines. But far more important, the party of the majority gains control of the senate committees.

The pre-election battles in which the Democrats seem to have the edge are in Oklahoma, West Virginia, Wyoming, and Kentucky. About in that order. Also Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, and Idaho.

The Democrats admit their weakest points are in Montana and Colorado. The Republicans by no means concede New Mexico, Rhode Island, and Tennessee, but the Democrats don't seem too worried about those states.

At this writing, it is useless to make predictions, for even between this calm moment and the time these lines are in print, skies may fall or some individual may stub his toe. Bets are collected after, not before, elections.

It is fortunate, of course, that all writers as well as all bettors are not equipped with extra-sensory powers. If and when the day comes when we are, the fun will be taken out of reading, writing, and betting.

And that day may come, believe it or not. I feel quite positive from the scientific proof offered, that most of the various forms of the supernatural are untenable. But, after attending a couple of lectures and reading considerable material on "parapsychology," I have become convinced that certain things MAY exist which are at present considered impossible.

I refer to extra-sensory perception, clairvoyance, and psychokinesis. And I see no reason why more scientists shouldn't give these subjects a more thorough looking-into than they have deigned to indulge in up to now. Some have.

Dr. J. B. Rhine, director of the parapsychological laboratory at Duke university, has been conducting experiments along these eerie lines for nearly two decades. He is a very modest man, and he leans over backward to avoid offering any conclusions or making any flat statements concerning these experiments.

I have read his book (heard him speak to an intimate group, take part in a forum and later answer questions at a private gathering under the auspices of the Washington Society for Parapsychology.

For almost two decades, as I said, Dr. Rhine and his assistants have been trying to determine whether or not there is a scientific basis for telepathy (the transfer of thought from one human brain to another); clairvoyance (the ability to visualize things or events taking place beyond the vision of knowledge); or for that ability which may involve both of the former, precognition—the ability to predict things which will occur in the future.

And also psychokinesis, the hardest one of all for the cynical to swallow. That is the power of mind over matter, e.g. ability to make dice fall the way you want them to by thinking at them.

Roughly, this is an example of what has been done by Dr. Rhine and others. After long experiment and mathematical calculation, it is determined that by chance alone anybody can pick correctly five cards out of a pack of 25. That is just guessing, and it is even money the subject can [illegible].

If he is right oftener (and may have been right consistently more often than five in 25) that is MORE than chance. If he is right often enough, it is said that he has extra-sensory perception. In other words, he is able to perceive what the card is without the use of his senses, but rather by some undefined, unmeasured, unclassified ability which science as yet cannot explain.

Clairvoyance is a common experience. An example might be of the mother who has a vivid and alarming impression of a train wreck. It may be a nightmare, a waking hallucination, or just an intuition. The wreck seems to be connected with her son, perhaps with some definite place like a tunnel. It turns out later that her son was actually injured in a wreck at the spot where her dream assigned it.

Careful checking of such experiences is now going on, and Dr. Rhine feels that the results in these cases too, appear to show that some unknown process is involved, unexplained in terms of our ordinary senses.

As to psychokinesis, experiments have seemed to prove that dice rolled in a mechanical cage could be made to fall, oftener than they would be by the laws of chance, according to the way the subject wished them to fall.

Dr. Rhine and his associates are trained psychologists. They say they are not trying to convince anyone that the above-mentioned qualities are actually possessed by certain individuals but they are trying to investigate their apparent existence.

And Now a Book On John Garner

I had another adventure which might be called parapolitical. There was nothing psychic about it, but it included a piece of hindsight that is interesting.

The hindsight is that of former Speaker of the House and Vice-President John Nance Garner. He said he wished he had never left the house of representatives to run for vice-president. He felt that if Franklin Roosevelt had had a man like Speaker Joe Cannon in the speaker's chair—a no-man—Roosevelt could have avoided some of the mistakes Garner thinks he made. In other words, Garner would have liked to play Cannon to Roosevelt.

This came out in connection with a gathering of a few of the news friends of that over-six-feet-tall-Texan who looks like Abraham Lincoln and talks like Will Rogers. A man who was brought up on a ranch, but thought cows were a novelty until he was 10 because all they raised on his father's ranch were buffalo. He is Washington correspondent for more dailies than any one I ever heard of, and once we wangled him one vote for the vice-presidential nomination for the lark of it. Now he's author of a book.

I'm talking about Bascom Timmons and his book, "Garner of Texas," the only complete record of that fiery gentleman from Uvalde whose record for integrity and political ability in the house of representatives is one few can rival.

"Timmy" wrote it from his own notes and absolutely free hand. He probably knows Garner better than anyone on earth. It's a good book. It contains many interesting things including the "hindsight" I quoted.

Timmons is not only popular among newsmen, but he's popular with congressmen, presidents, cops and cats. One of his cats had its portrait painted by Howard Chandler Christy; another was operated on by a specialist at Johns Hopkins, both thereby setting up feline records in their respective fields, as their master has in his. If you're interested in "Garner of Texas," you'll be interested in what Timmons of Texas has to say about him.

"Busy Little Aunt"

Everyone is familiar with the little black "Argentine ant". It swarms into homes, getting into food, and in the garden it destroys flowers. On the farm it is injurious to citrus and other fruits and to shade trees by attacking the blossoms and by distributing, establishing and protecting mealy bugs, aphids and scale insects. These insects are widely known for their social organizations.

Cleopatra's Needle

Cleopatra's Needle (the obelisk) in Central park, New York City, was a gift to this country from the Khedive of Egypt. William H. Vanderbilt footed the bill for getting it to New York, and the hieroglyphs were supposedly inscribed by the Egyptian who snatched Moses from the bullrushes.

Annular Eclipse

A certain type of eclipse of the sun is called an "annular" eclipse. In such an eclipse the moon appears to be slightly smaller than the sun, so that when the moon moves in front of the sun a narrow ring or "annulus" of light is visible around the moon. This is different than a total eclipse in which the moon completely covers the sun.

Britain's Atomic Pile

Britain's first small-scale atomic pile at Harwell is producing a small amount of heat. A select team of scientists at this station has manufactured its first sample of plutonium. A new 2,000 acre "atom factory" at Sellafield will manufacture plutonium on a large scale, produce electric power from uranium and pump it into Britain's unique grid system of electricity.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

I'm Glad We're "Different!"

There's a lot of difference of opinion in our county on the best kind of pasture. Some say alfalfa mixed with brome grass—others say mixed with oats or barley. But all agree that a mixture's better than a single crop.

I sometimes think people are the same way—and the strength of America is its mixture of so many different strains—some from one country, some from another—right down to little differences: like folks who have a taste for beer and those who prefer cider.

From where I sit, so long as we never become intolerant of one another's different tastes—so long as we live together with our differences, and even supplement them the way brome grass does alfalfa, then we're a mighty good crop!

So neighbor—enjoy your cider while I enjoy my beer! Vote for your candidate—I'll stand by mine! But never let our differences divide us!

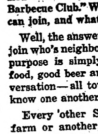
From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh



Want To Join Our Club?

Newcomers to our town are puzzled when they hear talk of "The Barbecue Club." Want to know who can join, and what the purpose is.

Well, the answer is: any one can join who's neighborly inclined. The purpose is simply to enjoy good food, good beer and ale, good conversation—all towards getting to know one another better.

Every other Saturday, at one farm or another, the pit is dug, and the fire started. And by sundown, neighbors from miles around have come together—the women contributing cakes, pies, and coffee, the men contributing the meat for barbecuing, and the beer or ale.

From where I sit, it's this simple wholesome side of country life in America—its spirit of good-fellowship—that makes for tolerance and better understanding between neighbors.

As I say, Neighbor, any one can join up! So come along a week from this Saturday.

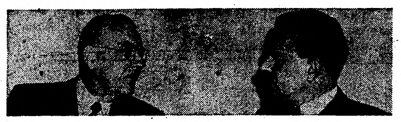
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Proposes Moscow Mission, Rocks Foundation of U. S. Policy; Russ Ask Big Four Parley Renewal

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Bi-partisan unity in the U. S. was grievously wounded by the knife-edged Berlin crisis when, on the one hand, President Truman called a private conference with Under Secretary of State Robert Lovett and Secretary of State George Marshall to mull over the situation . . .



. . . and, on the other hand, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey summoned his foreign affairs advisor, John Foster Dulles, from Paris to find out for himself what was going on in Europe.

DIPLOMACY:
Trip Canceled

To President Truman, for engineering the abortive deal to send Chief Justice Fred Vinson to Moscow for personal talks with Kremlin leaders on the atomic bomb, went the credit for producing the most heroically proportioned diplomatic faux pas of the year.

It happened very swiftly and very simply. Mr. Truman deciding suddenly to try his own hand at straightening out the tangled foreign mess, started making preparations to send Vinson to Russia.

THEN the state department heard about it. Robert Lovett, under-secretary of state, profoundly shocked, notified George Marshall who came winging frantically across the Atlantic from Paris to stop the President from committing what he considered a blunder of immense gravity.

The Vinson trip was called off, of course, and President Truman backed hastily away from the whole business after issuing an abashed note of explanation.

BUT THE memories lingered on, Mr. Truman, in the minds of those who knew or thought they knew about the international situation, had gone completely beyond the pale with this momentary, headstrong effort.

His campaign opponent, Gov. Thomas Dewey, at first wavered between righteous anger at what he obviously considered a deliberate flouting of the established bi-partisan foreign policy and elation that the Democratic candidate had made such a grievous tactical error.

And although the Dewey camp was astute enough to realize that its cause would benefit more if it magnanimously ignored the affair than if it leaped in for the slaughter, it nevertheless redounds to the New York governor's credit that he did not take advantage of this internationally dangerous situation for his personal gain.

Significance

Why was President Truman so widely and thoroughly castigated for making what he undoubtedly looked upon as a sincere, constructive attempt to clear up the Russians' "misunderstanding" of the problem of atomic control?

Because his intention of sending Chief Justice Vinson to Moscow represented a serious divergence from the basic characteristic of U. S. foreign policy—toughness with Russia.

MR. TRUMAN'S proposal amounted to a softening up of the laboriously built "get tough" attitude of the U. S. toward Moscow. It was tantamount to saying in a pleading voice, "Let's, get together once more and try to talk this thing out."

Current history has proved that the kind of personal diplomacy the President sought to institute in the Vinson trip has been completely unavailing in dealing with Russia since the war. Moreover, insofar as personal diplomacy always tends to bypass the United Nations, it usually has an ill effect on international relations in general.

IN THE final analysis, a personal visit to the Kremlin by Vinson probably would have upset the entire, carefully fabricated structure of the policy upon which the U. S. is depending to defeat Russia's aims in Europe.

ANYTHING NEW

What, No War?

Answers to the question "Does Russia want war?" are a drug on the market, in informed and uninformed circles alike, but now and then someone comes up with a reply that is a little more imaginative than most.

ONE OF this kind has been furnished by an experienced professional diplomat—necessarily anonymous lest his identity become known to the Russians—who is attending the U. N. meetings in Paris. He said:

"There will be no war soon. The reason is that Stalin, the head of the peace party, has just had Andrei Zhdanov, the head of the war party, murdered."

(Zhdanov, who died several weeks ago, was one of the ranking members of the politburo where he was almost on a par with Molotov in power and influence. He had been talked of as a possible successor to Stalin. His demise was mourned with parades, pageantry and ostentation by Stalin, the boys in the Kremlin and the Russian people.)

"HE (ZHDANOV) urged immediate war. He argued that if Russia was defeated militarily she would win politically, since the resulting horror and chaos would cause a new, irresistible wave of communism.

"As long as Zhdanov was successful, Stalin gave him his head. When he failed in Yugoslavia, Stalin told him to lay off. Zhdanov defied the Soviet generalissimo. So Stalin got his head.

"This means that Stalin's waiting tactics have prevailed. There will be no war soon."

BIG FOUR:
Come Again

While the U. S. state department was exerting all its influence to prevent a return to direct negotiations with Russia at this time, the Soviets were hammering away at the opposite course of action by demanding that Big Four discussions of the Berlin issue be resumed.

THE TWO viewpoints, starkly emphasized by the reception Mr. Truman's futile mission-to-Moscow idea received in the U. S., revealed with extreme clarity the broad gap now separating the East and West.

Russia's demand wasn't new. It was a repetition of Moscow's now well-established tactics in East-West relations. What the Soviets wanted was simply that the Berlin question be removed from the agenda of the U. N. security council and that discussions among the Big Four be resumed where they were severed last August in Moscow.

Andrei Y. Vishinsky, deputy Soviet foreign minister, handed a note to that effect to Juan A. Bramuglia of Argentina, acting president of the security council, who separately informed the U. S., British and French delegations.

IT WAS all wasted effort as far as the western powers were concerned. Neither the U. S., Britain, nor France wanted to get within shouting distance of direct negotiations with the Russians at this point.

One western spokesman commented simply, "The Russian reply is unhelpful." The Soviets, again, were making no concession to peace.

JUST A FIRE HAZARD

'Sagging' White House Due for Repairs

This probably will cost you a million dollars.

The White House — America's home for its presidents—will undergo a series of reconstruction jobs next year that will bolster up the slightly sagging, 132-year-old executive mansion. And it is probable that the work may cost U. S. taxpayers as much as a million dollars.

W. E. Reynolds, public buildings commissioner, said a structural survey is being conducted to determine what repairs are needed.

Large scale improvements of the rambling presidential residence will have to be undertaken, Reynolds pointed out, because the building as it now stands is such a fire hazard "it would not pass the code of any single responsible city in America."

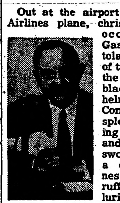
Autumn Brings Washington A Potpourri of 'Occasions'

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—After a tropically terrible summer the capital burst into autumnal glory with cool weather providing the zest and zip necessary to meet the feverish renewal of activity after the summer doldrums.

Let me review some of the varied events which provided pungent relief from the news of diplomatic quarrels, political billingsgate, and war.



BAUKHAGE

Out at the airport, an American Airlines plane, christened for the occasion "Don Gaspar de Portola," dropped out of the skies. Down the ramp came a black - bearded, helmeted Spanish Conquistadore, resplendent in flowing scarlet cape and shining broadsword. Next came a charming Chinese girl in her ruffled dress, alluring as a lotus blossom. Then a less exotic crowd of beauties, sportsfolk, business men, headed by the mayor of San Francisco. They had come to tell us about the resumption this year of the Portola Festival at the Golden Gate. (They visited eight other major cities, too.)

Don Gaspar de Portola was the famous explorer who was sent to America from Spain in 1769 to chase the Jesuits from California, the English from Canada, and the Russians from Alaska. He didn't quite fill that order but he did locate and explore San Francisco Bay and discover a couple of other harbors.

I paid my respects to His Excellency Don Gaspar, to the tall, slim, pretty and modest water-nymph, Ann Curtis, Olympiad winner, and to my old pal Jimmy Abbey, onetime international photographer who made even Stalin "look pleasant." Now Jimmy is an ABC commentator on the Pacific coast.

But something better was to come. We sat down to luncheon and I felt right at home! There was Chef John Lischetti, of the Nugget Grill, founded way back in the gold rush days when nuggets were the medium of exchange. And better still there were sand-dabs, that strange flat creature sans-scales in the ocean and sans-rival when prepared "a la Pescad' oro." (Get the nugget?) But best of all was the crab salad nugget, which makes all other crabs seem crabbed by comparison. The food was all native, flown from San Francisco for the occasion!

PORTOLA AND ENTOURAGE

Viva Portola!

George C. Marshall
As a Humanitarian

The Marine band blares out a march from the platform overlooking the huge Presidential room of the Statler where more than 500 guests are gathered for the ceremony in which Variety International, that cheerful and charitable group of show folk, is to confer its annual Humanitarian award.

In march the guests of honor, statesmen, diplomats, tycoons, actors, legal lights, and whatnot. They stand at their places at the head tables which form two tiers banked with roses.

A fanfare and George Catlett Marshall takes his place amid cheers that drown the music. The salute to the colors. We sit down to drown any modicum of sorrow that has survived the preceding reception. Speeches are short and good. Marshall, as secretary of state, could say little that was new, something that was grim, much that was encouraging and all of it "off the record" for we are already in the midst of parlous international negotiations.

Variety club president reads the citation:

> "The career of the Hon. George Catlett Marshall has embraced leadership in peace as well as in war.
> "Soldier by profession, he has ever displayed a conspicuous and consistent genius for the military.
> "Shunning the opportunity to seek surcease from the cumulative burdens of two world wars, his devotion to principle and country has led him along the paths toward world amity and peace since the end of hostilities.
>
> "As author of the Marshall Plan, he translated into generous and inspiring fulfillment the shining hope for liberty, honor and dignity of free men everywhere.
> "We salute the breadth of vision and warmth of heart of a great and beloved American."

And so to bed.

Review of Byrd's
Antarctic Expedition

Rain pours, we drive through the slippery Washington streets to the navy yard (now the naval gun factory).

The Washington navy yard was planned by President John Adams when French aggression made "freedom of the seas" a menacing international issue. Work began on the site in 1800. Here the "Wasp" and the "Hornet" were built to play their roles in the War of 1812, here the "Constitution" and the "President" came for overhauling and repairs.

We stop at the sentry box: "Guests of Admiral Davis." The marine sentry salutes. We know our way to the officers' club. Handshakes and refreshments and into a bus that takes us to the event of the evening which the rain prevented us from witnessing aboard the hulking LST moored to the dock in the Anacostia river.

So we must go indoors to see one of the most thrilling things I ever saw on the screen. A motion picture made from the actual photographic record of the 1946-47 exploration of the Antarctic under Adm. Richard E. Byrd. I hope you saw or will see it—"Secret Land." It had its premier on Navy Day, in 20 cities. The commercial movie makers used the official film taken by navy, marine corps, coast guard and army cameramen on the scene.

The picturing of disaster, of rescue, of tragedy, of suspense, of achievement, (in most cases the actual event as it happened) are something for which I have no comparison.

One purpose of the 1946 expedition which was a follow-up of Byrd's original 1929 undertaking when he established "Little America" and explored the great Antarctic ice cap, was to train the navy in polar operations.

Another aim was to make further discoveries and release the "unknown treasures" (which Byrd's earlier explorations indicated were there) for the benefit of mankind. Even the "routine" operations, the ships amidst the ice-floes, the landing on the ice-cap, the erection of the tent city and the operation of the planes, was an inspiring and thrilling sight, a tremendous tribute to the American skill in mechanical achievement, in personal endurance, bravery, ingenuity. It will make you proud to be an American.

Admiral Byrd didn't look much older than when we bid him Godspeed before he started on his first Antarctic venture. That was close to me for I was connected with the organization that syndicated the story for the press. But I was struck with the passage of time, and the years of study and research that have intervened, when I looked at Dr. Paul Siple, polar authority and geographer. (He was present in the flesh as well as on the screen.)

Paul Siple was chosen to go on the 1929 expedition after winning in a competition involving 600,000 Boy Scouts of America. Then he was a tall, slender lad of 20. Now he's stocky and graying. As a prominent geographer he has done important research for the war department.

The story of the Antarctic is studded with great names — Scott, Amundsen, Shackelton, to mention only three—as well as with sacrifice and tragedy. This picture of the "Secret Land," less secret now, shows the tremendous advances in technology made since the days of the early explorers.

It took thousands of years to shape the penguins' wings into the fins which make his survival in a polar land possible. In a few years in the laboratories and factories of America we have shaped the means which make survival and exploration possible in the same environment — exploration and discovery which some day may be of tremendous benefit to mankind.

The Russians last month kept scheduling Red air maneuvers over Berlin airlift corridors. Perhaps because of the overcrowded condition of the heavens over Moscow, Minsk, Pinsk, Baku, Tartu and Stalingrad?

For the Good of All . . . . .

DEWEY AND WARREN

Thomas E. Dewey grew up in a small town here in the Middle West. He worked on a farm as a boy, and now lives on a farm. He stands committed to a program of price supports, expansion of rural electrification and improved soil conservation.

For Parity Program

He repeatedly has declared his support of the long-range farm program passed by the last Congress, supporting farm prices at 90% of parity through the 1949 crop year and setting up a flexible plan of support thereafter, so that farmers will be protected in the degree of their need. Said he recently:

"We must make sure that the farmer, while being encouraged to produce plentifully to meet the needs of the people for food, does not become the victim of his own production. Our program of price supports must be maintained. It will benefit the farmers and it is for the good of all the people."

Freedom and opportunity for all men is Dewey's goal. An able administrator, he has established efficiency and integrity in New York's state government and increased its usefulness to the people. Ably assisted by Governor Warren as Vice-President, he will revamp the government in Washington and place it on a new plane of service as he did the government of New York.

JOE BALL

Joe Ball has never looked for the easy way out. From the earliest days of his service in the United States Senate, he had the courage to be honest. While others hesitated, he told the people clearly and unequivocally what he proposed to do on the great issues facing the country.

His Fight for Peace

While most officials waited, uncertain of public opinion and unwilling to risk criticism, Joe introduced a resolution seeking to put the Senate on record for a strong international organization for peace. He carried his campaign to the people, and helped more than any other official to create the public support that has made possible the United Nations.

Time after time Joe Ball has fought for the things he thinks are right, regardless of political consequences. An editor wrote on one of these occasions:

"Joe Ball considered his country first and his job second. He called the big turn as he saw it, and he gets our vote." Said another editor: "He has placed the country's future above small-time political considerations. We couldn't vote against him and go to bed that night with a clear conscience."

He led the fight for legislation that would curb the abuses in the field of labor relations and yet preserve the rights and privileges of workers.

For Price Supports

Appreciative of the needs of agriculture, he fought for the long-range farm program adopted by the last Congress, the first action ever taken to assure farmers of long-range protection against crippling price drops.

He opposed repeal of the federal tax on oleomargarine. He fought for the biggest appropriation ever made for rural electrification and has consistently urged the expansion of soil conservation facilities.

YOUNGDAHL

All Minnesota looks to Governor Luther W. Youngdahl as the champion of youth. All over the state, his pleas for better opportunities for boys and girls have stirred audiences.

Plan to Aid Youth

Believing its youth are Minnesota's greatest asset, he obtained passage of an act setting up a Youth Conservation Commission, which is (1) directing the treatment of youthful offenders along new lines, shaped to promote their rehabilitation, and (2) stimulating activities to prevent boys and girls getting into trouble.

He drove slot machines out of the state, because, he said, they are a menace to the welfare of youth.

More Aid to Schools

He led in the fight for improvement of state school aid distribution and more ample school support, which, among other gains, increased state aid to local schools $11,000,000 a year. He recognized the plight of persons depending on the state's assistance programs and fought for increased allowances. He championed a bill providing state aid for public health nursing. He has embarked upon a far-reaching plan to improve care of the mentally ill and give them the fullest opportunity for rehabilitation. In field after field, he has sought to improve the state's services. "God bless you," parents have written, "for trying to make Minnesota a better place in which to live."

"LAND O' LAKES Fights Our Battles"

Together in Land O' Lakes, dairy farmers can accomplish what none of them could do alone, declares Albert Peterson, who milks 35 cows on his farm near Milaca, Minn. "By co-operating in Land O'Lakes," he says, "we own our own processing plants and share in the returns from distribution, as well. We farmers have a voice in management. We get patronage dividends. But you can't measure what Land O'Lakes does for us only in terms of dollars and cents. Land O'Lakes represents our interests, fights our battles, all year 'round."

If you milk cows or raise poultry, sell through Land O'Lakes. As farmers testify, it pays.

Letter Explains Power Shortage

To Our Customers:

Due to the fact that very necessary work is being done on our Crookston line, south of Warren, Minnesota, we are experiencing difficulty in maintaining service over the supper peak load period. Without the Crookston line and new plant, our remaining facilities have not been adequate to carry the load when minor trouble occured and several interruptions have occured at about 6:00 p. m.

The suppertime load over the past week has been at an all time high and considerebly more than was anticipated.

It is anticipated that the work on our Crookston line will be completed by November 15th and service will then become normal.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. N. Says Cease Fire in Palestine; Truman Asks More Defense Funds; U. S. Atom Control Plan Approved

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

CEASE FIRE:
Holy Land

Almost before anyone knew what was happening fierce fighting between Israeli and Egyptian forces had flared into bloom in the Negev, southern Palestine desert area.

ISRAELI government spokesmen said the purpose of the Israeli attack was to smash open the road to Jewish settlements in the Negev. Blocked transportation lines had prevented the Jews from running supply convoys to isolated settlements in the district.

But Dr. Ralph Bunche, acting Palestine mediator for the U. N., in his report to the security council, told a different story. Blame for the eruption of fighting in the Negev, he said, was not a "question of black and white."

"EACH side has soiled its hands in the grim business of trying to win a war through the instrumentality of a forced truce," was his version of the conflict.

By the time the battle had proceeded savagely for six days the harassed U. N. security council had had enough. It commanded both Arabs and Jews to issue immediate cease-fire orders.

Earlier, Bunche had attempted to promote a three-day truce in the fighting, with each side holding the positions it then was occupying. The effort fell through, however, when Israel rejected the proposal.

EVEN as the security council acted the fighting was spreading from the Negev to other fronts in the Holy Land—along the Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway, where Trans-Jordan forces were grouped, and northeast of Tel Aviv in areas held by other Arab forces.

Results of the security council order, at the outset, at least, were disappointing. Each side tried to shift the blame to the other; neither appeared willing to hold the battle.

Palestine truce observers informed the United Nations that the Israeli forces generally appeared to be the attackers in the new fighting that had developed outside the southern front in the Negev.

CONTROL PLAN:
For Atoms

How to establish effective, workable control of atomic energy on an international scale is one of the rocks upon which the U.N. has almost foundered more than once, but the situation began to look a shade or two brighter when the United Nations suddenly steeled its resistance to almost impossible Russian demands on the issue.

OVER the objections of the Soviet bloc, the U.N. political committee overwhelmingly endorsed the western plan for atomic control as a necessary basis for eventual elimination of atomic weapons.

The conflict which has kept the atomic control problem deadlocked for so long is simply this:

The U. S. and the West insist that an air-tight system of international control and inspection must be established before the U. S. would feel safe in destroying its atomic weapons.

The resolution which the political committee adopted is generally in line with the American policy. The plenary session of the general assembly was expected to give it a routine final approval.

Peculiarly enough, this was the first time since Bernard Baruch presented the American plan to the atomic energy commission in June, 1946, that all of the United Nations had a chance to vote on it. Previously atomic energy was discussed only in the security council and the atomic energy commission.

SHORTLY prior to the U.N. action the U. S. had demanded that the world group turn the deadlocked problem over to the five great powers and Canada for direct negotiations.

At that time Warren R. Austin, chief U. S. delegate, had told the 58-nation political committee that the U.N. could go no further in its efforts to control the atom until the Soviet union agreed to "participate in the world community on a cooperative basis."

HOW much good the U.N. vote of approval would do as long as the Russians continued to object was a question that remained hanging fire.

It was conceded generally that, regardless of how much satisfaction the western nations might achieve by thus overruling and snubbing Moscow, the paramount problem—that of preserving the peace—probably had not been moved very far along the road to a solution.

George Polk

Last May, George Polk, CBS correspondent, was taken out on Salonika bay in a boat where he was blindfolded, bound hand and foot and shot through the head. His murderers: Communists. Their motive: Simply to produce a murder, the blame for which might be pinned on the rightist Greek government in order to defame it abroad. Gregory Staktopoulos, Communist Salonika newspaperman, confessed he had witnessed the slaying and implicated three other Greek Communists.

DEFENSE:
Big Budget

World tension had slacked off slightly, but according to President Truman's estimate on next year's defense budget the U. S. doesn't intend to relax its vigilance on that account.

THE MILITARY budget for 1949 will be a neat 14.4 billion dollars—that is, if Mr. Truman's current request doesn't get trimmed. It represents an outlay about two billion dollars higher than the figure at which defense spending is running now.

(It doesn't make any difference whether President Truman won or lost the election. He still was required to prepare budget estimates for the congress convening next January.)

The President said that his defense officials had wanted a budget of around 23 billion dollars for the fiscal year starting July 1, but that he had cut them back to the 14.4 billion figure.

WITH RARE candor he admitted that it would take a Croesus to maintain spending as many billions as the officials wanted. His own aim, Mr. Truman said, was to get a military program the country could pay for.

He added that he hoped eventually to reduce military expenditures to above five to seven billion dollars—a remarkably optimistic statement, coming as it did before the election when he was conceded virtually no chance of being able to control any kind of governmental spending after the first of the year.

ATOM PLANE:
Seven Years?

Look up into the sky in about seven years and you might see an atomic-powered airplane scudding across the clouds. Scientists now think there is a good chance that nuclear-propelled aircraft will be in production by that time.

AN OAK RIDGE scientist, David M. Poole, startled the atom-conscious public with the announcement that the theory of an atom-driven airplane has been worked out to completion and is ready to be translated by engineers into actual plans for such a plane.

The nuclear scientists have thought out a way to tap the power of a mobile atomic pile, Poole said. Now it's up to engineers to make the idea work.

Poole disclosed that the scientists have made up their minds how to make the best use of the power whose source is the heat generated in an atomic pile.

What kind of engine will be used to chain the tremendous power concentrated in the uranium fuel? The rocket-thrust motor was tried and abandoned, said Poole. Steam turbine, turbo-jet and ram jet all were crossed off.

THE POWER unit will be a "nuclear rocket." Just what a nuclear rocket might be is top-secret information. All anyone can even guess at at this point is that it probably involves a new principle of application of power.

DEFENSE SURVEY

Experts Eye U. S. Mobilization Plans

Top military planners are rushing work to complete a spot-check of United States mobilization requirements by November 15.

The check will disclose whether the United States over-all strategic defense plan makes sense and whether it can be applied readily.

Mobilization experts intend to find out if the requirements, listed by the army, navy and air force can be reconciled with one another, and if this nation has the capacity to fill the military's estimated wartime needs.

All this doesn't mean that war is necessarily around the corner. Comprehensive analyses of the strategic blueprint are routine steps in U. S. mobilization planning. However, the spot-check is in line with the faster military tempo these days.

U. S. Presidents Respect Members of Fourth Estate

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—In this post-election calm which has settled over the domestic political scene, many a vest, shirt, blouse, or slip in the Capital conceals a palpitating heart.

What about my government job after the glad (?) New Year?

The regular classified civil servants haven't much to fear. They can't be fired without cause, and no matter how thorough a new administration's housecleaning may be, most of the furniture lands right back where it was before, although here and there, you may at first fail to recognize an old friend in a new slipcover.

Baukhage

Long ago most 100 per cent New Dealers in high places displayed the wisdom which they felt was the better part of valor and vamoosed. Others assumed new colors. Some who had not been too careful previously to keep the right hand from knowing what the left hand was doing gradually began to grow ambidextrous and soon were able to write the lesson on the blackboard without exposing the wedding-ring finger.

There is however one class of permanent Washingtonians which goes on like the brook. But even individuals in this class may find the nature of their daily tasks differing slightly as administrations change. I refer, of course, to the Fourth Estate which now includes commentators (since radio newsmen as well as newspapermen are eligible to the National Press club), thus establishing at least a minimum standard of merit.

Naturally we who cover the White House always wonder what manner of man we are going to have to handle. While a new incumbent is learning the art of getting his name favorably inserted into a Washington dispatch or broadcast we have a chance to learn the care and feeding of the source of news which feeds the news to us.

Once Dewey had a bad reputation in this regard. But then, most candidates are suspect before they start, since it is taken for granted that they all are subject to the disease of presidentitis which affects victims differently.

Coolidge, for instance, was perhaps least afflicted with this malady that attacks the strongest individual when he walks under the white-pillared portico of 1600 Pennsylvania avenue to stay for at least four years. And Coolidge was about as rich in front page material of his own making as the clam he sought to emulate.

I remember a remark William Hard, now an editor of Reader's Digest, once made to me:

"Cal never seemed to suffer from presidentitis," (Hard invented the word, I believe)—"he is the only occupant of the White House I know of who, when he lay down to take his daily siesta, didn't think when he awoke that the world had gone to pieces."

No newsman, except toward the last, could complain about Franklin Roosevelt's news conferences, Regardless of what one might think of his views, his news was always printable. It will be hard to produce another such.

The heavy majority of those who traveled with Dewey on his campaign trips had nothing but praise. But a few of those who had experienced his press conferences, and had enjoyed—or otherwise—his press relations in earlier days were cynical.

"Wait," they said, "until the honeymoon is over."

I found it hard to get concrete predictions. I myself had seen a vast improvement in Dewey's press relations over the years since his first campaign. And I see no reason why a person can't and doesn't learn.

On the train, whenever he could (and—that is the way most of the correspondents described it — "could," not "would"), Dewey went into the press car attached to his train, chatted individually with the fellows, learned to connect names with new faces, answered questions, and at least appeared to be frank and free with his "off the record" remarks concerning Republican doubts and fears, real, imagined, or assumed. He sometimes took time for a game of chess "with the boys."

There was, however, much less informality in the atmosphere of his entourage than there was in Truman's. The Dewey affair moved so smoothly that a creak or two would have been welcome. Like the farmer in the poem "so even ran his course of life the neighbors thought it odd."

There was one man who made press relations on the Dewey campaign train a joy—well, two men. One was Jim Hagerty, trained reporter himself, who is expected to be the public relations secretary in the White House. The other was a man who probably won't be in Washington at all—Dewey's veteran political adviser, Edwin Jaeckle.

There was no conflict between the two, a rare situation indeed. Jaeckle supplemented Hagerty.

This would seem to contradict the sharp charges of Warren Moscow, author of "Politics in the Empire State" which came out this fall. Moscow, one of New York City's top-rank political reporters, who also covered Albany, claims that Dewey shut down news sources during his governorship in an attempt to thwart any criticism. That he even tried to lay down a press conference rule that a question was "off the record," thus covering up the fact that an answer had been given not to be made public or had been refused. Moscow asserts that Dewey wanted to be the oracle, the one and only, the sole source of what should be reported.

If that was true earlier in Dewey's career, the dapper New Yorker who has been widely-touted of late for being able to take advice and for being able to pick people who know how to advise, has had some good advice. If he should revert to methods such as Moscow describes, two things would happen; first, he would suffer; second, he would fail in his attempt, and the effects of the effort might be permanently disastrous.

Free Press Is Best Check

Some presidents have tried to conduct government by disturbing the "checks and balances." It never works long and the freedom of the press is one of the checks—a principle that is part and parcel of the American concept of government.

A notable example of how the very weight of the news, legitimate news, breaks through any wall, was the case of the financial conference called by President Hoover just before the end of his regime—1931, to be exact. Hoover had no intention whatever of deceiving the public. He simply didn't understand that you couldn't have a gathering like that without making an adequate explanation of some kind. At any rate just a bare announcement was issued.

The next day at the White House news conference, Hoover said he would not comment on the meeting (though the notice had appeared in the papers), and that he considered it the duty of the press not to print anything which was only partially true, or else incomplete.

Richard Oulihan of the New York Times, one of the most beloved and respected correspondents who ever covered Washington, and an outstanding leader, made a typically dignified, but very emphatic protest then and there. He said it was out of the question to ask the reporters not to get as complete a story as they could, it was pointed out by another well-known reporter that the press would have to have the story, and the reporters would have to get it, regardless of the President's wishes.

The President refused at first, but the reporters insisted. Finally he agreed to give out an official statement after the conference.

I have known other examples of short-lived gag rules. One which Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau tried to establish on the treasury. He issued an order that none of the treasury officials could talk with newsmen. He might as well have told reporters not to read the market quotations. It failed. Legitimate news continued to be reported as it always had been.

Franklin Roosevelt had, at one time, at least 80 per cent of the newspapers "against" him. He knew he couldn't change their editorial views by giving out news to their representatives. He also knew that if he tried to withhold news, the American people would be far less likely to support him. And because he understood the meaning of the freedom of the press, he wouldn't have thought of trying. And he knew how to make it appear as favorable as possible.

The most effective check in a democracy is not the first, second or third, but the fourth estate. An unenlightened public conceivably might elect a totally bad president and a totally bad congress which would establish a totally bad supreme court, but unless the press is gagged, the public in a democracy cannot be democratically unenlightened.

Modern shop equipment means high availability for service of Great Northern's diesel locomotives. A drop table makes possible the replacement of locomotive trucks in about one-fifth the time it formerly required for this operation.

DIESELS EASY ON OIL SUPPLY

Farmers and ranchers have learned that while a medium-size tractor costs more than a team of horses, it has far greater work capacity, and in the long pull is more economical than Old Dobbin.

What the tractor is to the man on the land, the diesel locomotive has become to the railway industry. Diesel freight, passenger and switching locomotives are going to work for the nation's railways in increasing numbers. Great Northern now has in service 156 diesels, or 276 separate units of this power. Although more are on order, the diesel is not expected to completely replace the steam locomotive for a long time—if ever.

A diesel locomotive costs more than a steam engine of comparable power rating; but, from there on the difference markedly favors the diesel. Expanded use of diesel power is keeping down operating costs—an extremely vital factor these days when wage, material and supply costs are far out of proportion to charges the railways are told they can make for their services.

The diesel locomotive is superior to its steam-driven cousin in many other respects. It is able to haul freight trains on more reliable schedules. It provides a faster, more comfortable, cleaner ride for passengers. It is a swift, efficient power plant in switching service.

And, outstanding among the virtues of the diesel locomotive is its economical consumption of fuel oil.

The war made Americans oil-conscious, and the postwar shortages of petroleum products—especially liquid fuel for home heating—created wide speculation to the effect that diesel locomotives are excessively rough on the nation's oil supply.

General Motors Corporation has made an exhaustive study of petroleum consumption by this country's principal users. The study developed these facts:

- The approximately 5,000 diesel locomotives in railway service today burn only 1 per cent of the total petroleum products consumed in this country.
- If diesel locomotives had performed all work on the railways in 1947, the quantity of diesel fuel burned would have been less than 5 per cent of the total consumption of petroleum products in all fields last year.

The expanding use of diesel power by Great Northern is of two-fold consequence: better railway service and real conservation of America's oil resources.

FUEL OIL REPORT FREE. The complete report on the study of fuel oil consumption in the U. S. is available without charge. Write to C. W. Moore, Executive Assistant, Great Northern Railway, St. Paul 1, Minn.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

"Husbands, Wives, and Marriage"

Maybe you read that survey published recently in a national magazine, entitled "Husbands, Wives, and Marriage."

It showed that among happily married couples, those who criticized themselves outnumbered those who criticized the other person. Among unhappily married couples, it was just the opposite—each one tended to criticize the other.

That's the way it is in our town, as I guess it is in yours. Criticism, whether it's of a wife's taste for hats, or a husband's taste for pipe tobacco and an evening glass of beer or ale, is a sure start towards unhappiness.

As for what made happy marriages, companionship within the home was listed most important of all. And from where I sit, a husband and wife who can spend an evening by the fire—with nothing more exciting than a mellow glass of beer, and a friendly conversation—are a truly well-matched couple!

Middle River Editor's Story of Holt's Typha Plant

Two Holt men, O. T. Ness and son, are pioneering in efforts to develop a practical market for cattail fluff, known commercially as Typha.

The job is an uphill one, but inspite of the difficulties involved they are tackling the job with vigor that is becoming of their energies.

* * * *

Typha (cattail) grow wild in abundant quantities in most parts of Minnesota as well as in many other states of the country. Back in the war years, Dr. Burgess of Chicago began experimenting with the fluff to see what could be done with it. During this period when the supply of cheap fluff from the south seas was cut off the product had a great demand for manufacturing purposes, and as a result, Dr. Burgess turned the product into the commercial market.

* * * *

It was during Dr. Burgess' period of experimentation that he came to Holt, attracted by the vast amount of fluff in the Mud Lake district. He made contacts with Mr. Ness and the two began working with Typha. Toward the close of the war, the Illinois manufacturer died, and in due course of time, Mr. Ness and his son purchased the interests of the Burgess Company in the Holt plant.

BUILDING MACHINES

In the main Holt plant, Mr. Ness and his son have been busily working on machines to process the fluff. Processing is the main job and getting it to the right stage for manufacture is the problem.

A purifier, for separating the chaff from the fluff has been built and apparently is the machine for the job. However, in Mr. Ness words, it isn't perfect yet, and it will take more experimenting before we get it where we want it.

A "batting" machine for putting the fluff into bats has also been built. The machine has been carefully built so that the bats can be cut to any length or weight. The machine is unique and can put out a lot of fluff in a day.

STORAGE FACILITIES

The Holt men have plenty of storage space. The coverted lumber yard has space for many tons of typha, and across the street a large building was built a few ears ago for housing the fluff.

EXPERIMENTS

The Burgess company conducted all kinds of different experiments with the product to test its safety, bouyancy, etc. The high quality of the material is a matter of public record with various universities and scientific institutions. Its acceptance is yet to come from the manufacturng public, but like anything new, it will come in due coure of time.

The product is an excellant filler for pillows and at present. Mr. Ness and son have been experimenting with filling corner pillows, sofa pillows, etc. The fact that Typha is mouse proof, rat proof, sound proof, moisture proof and a light weight fiber should mean instant approval by women the world over.

MUCH INTEREST

Interst in Typha is mounting Brokers, manufacturers, government agencies and other are writing for samples and literature to use in experimenting with the proccessed Typha. Brokers from as far away as New York have come to Holt to confer with Mr. Ness on getting the product on the market.

* * * *

One firm in Oklahoma has begun using Typha and gets it in carload lots. They now have an order in for another car.

ACCEPTANCE

Acceptance of the product is coming slowly by manufacturers. With the many ideas that Mr. Ness and son have will make Typha "click". Some day people will wonder " Why didn't I think of that."

Take a handful of cattails in your hand and really feel it. You will agree it is a crop that should have many uses.

TYPHA VIEWPOINT

From the viewpoint of Science and Engineering, here is what those fields have to say about Typha:

* * * *

"In a summarization as brief as this, it is not possible to set forth in deatail all of the experimental efforts made in behalf of this new product. Knowledge resulting from these experiments has accumulated over a period of 10 years, although it is true that in the past 2 years or so especially intensive tests have been made of the product itelf, as it was developed from the laboratory stage.

"Suffice it to say however, that all the many tests conducted to date, and the opinions of numerous unbaised scientists and engineering specialist are in accord that Typha fills a long felt need for a native American filling and stuffing material. Its value is predicted upon sound egnineering principles. Unquestionably, the benefits of this new product will become increasingly important with each passing day.

The fact that Typha has been approved for aircraft insulation and for buoyant cushions in motorboats speaks for itself.

Tests for heat conductivity, for warmth, for mildew and mould resistance, for use as soundproofing, for buoyancy and for other attributes have been conducted by such responsible organizations as the U. S. Department of Agriculture, United States Testing Company, Inc., and Armour Research Foundation, among others. In each case Typha has withstood these tests in a manner reflecting credit upon the promise it has held forth from the beginning. The results of these tests are specially significant when it is remembered that in every instance the properties of Typha were closely measured against the properties of other well known filling materials with years of acceptability behind them.

Nathan Hale

Nathan Hale, captain in the U. S. army, was apprehended within enemy lines while seeking information. He was executed on the morning of September 22, 1776. His last words were: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." A new bronze tablet marking the execution place has been set up by the Yale club of New York and Mary Washington colonial chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Roentgen—Great Discoverer

In November, 1895, an obscure physics professor, working in a modest little laboratory at the University of Wurzburg in Bavaria, came upon a mysterious ray which had the power to penetrate flesh, cloth, wood and metal. This tall, slender, bearded teacher was Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen. Using the mathematical symbol "x" for the unknown quantity, he called his discovery the X-ray.

Rheumatic Fever in Pets

Rheumatic fever, dreaded disease of children, also may strike pet animals, Dr. Don Ward of Santa Ana, Calif., reported in the Journal of the American Veterinary Medical association. He described cases in cats which recovered under intensive medical treatment and added that he also has observed the condition in several young dogs.

Housing Shortage Reason

In 1920 the population of the United States was 105 million. Today it is over 140 million. Along with the increase in population, the size of families decreased from 4.1 in 1930 to 3.8 in 1940, which means that eight years ago it took 7.9 per cent or 19 more dwelling units to house 1,000 people than it did in 1930.

South American Attractions

Most popular attractions in South America are the Inca ruins in Peru, winter sports in Chile, fishing, hunting and sight-seeing excursions in the famous Chile-Argentine lake region, and the unique charm and fascination of cosmopolitan cities such as Lima, Santiago and Buenos Aires.

Some Piece of Paper

Largest check in history was signed at the end of the government's last fiscal year. It was drawn for $7,500,000,000, and constituted the unemployment trust fund which had been invested in one-year government securities, and was to be so re-invested.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russ Reject U. N. Berlin Proposal; Stalin Hits Three Western Powers As Attempting to Start a New War

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DIFFERENT COAL STRIKE . . . French troops in battle array march into the Villiers mine in the St. Etienne area of France as the government seized strike-bound coal mines throughout northern France. Vicious rioting and assorted civil battles preceded the government's action in taking over the mines.

REJECTION:
U. N. Proposal

Russia wouldn't play ball with the United Nations on the settlement of the Berlin dispute.

A six-power "face-saving" resolution for solving the crisis was presented to the U. N. security council and promptly batted down by the Soviets—to the surprise of no one concerned.

THE RESOLUTION proposed that Russia lift the Berlin blockade immediately; that the four military governors of Germany begin immediate negotiations to implement the Moscow agreement of August 30 for a Soviet-backed, four-power controlled mark in Berlin by November 20, and that a foreign ministers' council be convened within 10 days thereafter to take up other serious differences over Germany.

Russia's stated objection to the resolution was that it provided for the lifting of the blockade before the currency control went into effect.

Previously, the western powers had turned down Andrei Vishinsky's counter proposal for simultaneous lifting of the blockade and putting into effect the currency agreement.

IN REALITY, this point of difference upon which the latest deadlock centered was a minor one, but it served to illustrate the vast gap that must be closed before a meeting of minds between the East and West can be achieved.

MOREOVER, it has become increasingly clear that Moscow does not even have any desire to lift the blockade. It is, for them, too good a weapon with which to attempt to bludgeon the U. S. and the West into granting them further concessions in Germany, including a voice in the operation of the all-valuable Ruhr industrial area.

STALIN TALKS:
'Horrors'

In what is probably the most amazing outburst he has made since the war, Soviet Premier Josef Stalin told the world that the U. S., Great Britain and France are seeking a new war through a "policy of aggression."

The accusation, despite the high level of its source, amounted to nothing more than a repetition of the already stereotyped Russian practice of attempting to turn an opponent's reasoning back on him.

HOWEVER, he added, the "public forces favoring peace" are too strong to permit "the instigators of a new war" to plunge the world again into the "horrors" of conflict.

Stalin named Winston Churchill as "the main instigator of a new war" and predicted that Churchill's "pupils of aggression" would be rejected by the people just as Churchill has been.

Although he did not label President Truman or any other leader as a "pupil in aggression," the implication was too clear to be mistaken, particularly since the Moscow radio had broadcast a prediction that Mr. Truman would be defeated on November 2.

STALIN accused the U. S. and Britain of twice rejecting settlements of the Berlin crisis with Russia and said that debate on the Berlin question in the U. N. security council "was a display of aggression on the part of Anglo-American and French ruling circles."

The British and Americans, the Soviet premier said, declared "null and void" an agreement reached in the Kremlin conferences August 30 that would have lifted the Soviet blockade and ended the crisis.

HE CHARGED that the western powers fear "most of all" to reach any agreement with the Soviet Union.

"What they want is not agreement and cooperation, but talk about agreement and cooperation, so as to put the blame on the U. S. S. R. by preventing agreement, and to 'prove' that cooperation is impossible."

Stalin's statement obviously was issued as a high-powered propaganda stroke—a move the Russians undoubtedly hoped would tip the Berlin scales in their favor.

Old-Fashioned, but . . .

Toothaches are old-fashioned. That is the opinion of Dr. John C. Brauer of the University of Washington school of dentistry, a leading authority on children's dentistry and care of the teeth.

Dr. Brauer said few children would experience dental pain during their lives if they practiced preventive measures now known to dental science. Most older people are doomed because of their past habits.

Headliners

"AND NOW, SIT BACK, RELAX, AND LISTEN TO AMOS 'N' ANDY"

IN YORK, Pa. . . . Mrs. Walter Sechrist made a wide-eyed announcement that her gas range picks up short wave transmissions made by her next-door neighbor, an amateur radio operator, vowed it had broadcast a conversation between the neighbor and another operator in South America.

IN SALEM, Mass. . . . Robert C. Carter claimed in a divorce suit that his wife had deserted him a block from the church just two minutes after they were married in 1944.

IN HAGERSTOWN, Mo. . . . Thieves broke into the Potomac Edison building, got away with a specially equipped camera set up to take pictures of thieves breaking into the Potomac Edison building.

IN LITTLE BRICKHILL, Eng. . . . Postmaster N. C. Parrott looked down his nose at the man with the gun trying to rob him of his postal receipts, sneered, "The revolver is not loaded, you knew." "Sorry," said the crushed desperado, slinking away.

IN DURAND, Wis. . . . Frank Weimirski was forced to reassure his customers as to the fact that he still was in the popcorn and soft drink business after he began making deliveries with an old hearse.

BLUFFING:
In Berlin

Gen. H. H. Arnold, wartime commander-in-chief of the U. S. air forces, turned up in the news with a military man's hearty opinion about what to do with the Russians in Berlin.

"WHY NOT take a motor convoy and push it through the corridor to Berlin?" he suggested. "Perhaps we might have learned something from Gen. George Patton's technique. If Patton were running the show he would take it through."

Russia, he claimed, is attempting a tremendous bluff against the U. S. and the western allies, but is "not ready to fight, doesn't want to fight and won't fight" if someone should call her bluff.

WHAT would the Russians do if an armed convoy did plow through the blockade? "Not much, if anything," was Arnold's laconic estimate.

"It would be a grave and basic error to let the Communists bluff us out in the present deadlock in Germany.

"They are not ready to fight and they do not want to fight. We should curb the national tendency to be in awe of the Russians, an awe amounting almost to fear.

"TIME plays with the Russians. We have the superior power now. They may have it later. Meantime, it would be folly to let them bridge the gap by bluff alone."

Whether he was right or wrong, Hap Arnold at least had done the worrying U. S. public one favor: By reducing the problem to hard, simple terms of pure action and divorcing it from the intricate realm of diplomacy he made it appear more understandable, less overwhelming and less frightening. General Arnold, at least isn't expecting a war tomorrow.

Elections Will Bring Out Those Cave Man Instincts

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—I know you may find it hard to believe, but I was greatly stirred up over the election campaign and its outcome. I have a job and it's as tough under one party as another. I have no vote, and between you and me, I am not agitating for a civil rights bill which will get me one.

Like all of the citizens of the District of Columbia, I share the delightful irresponsibility with minors, idiots and criminals who don't have a vote either.

Baukhage

Thus, I am without political affiliation, obligation, or prejudice. Well — sometimes I do have one prejudice—a race prejudice. Sometimes I get awfully prejudiced against the human race.

Another reason that I am not politically excited this year is that I have been watching the Washington vaudeville show from a good seat in the gallery press and radio gallery—most of the time for the past three decades, and although the performers have changed, there hasn't been too much alteration of the script. A Republican or a Democratic politician, to a reporter smells no sweeter by any name.

It is my business to report what they do and say, and, of course, from my standpoint, the more they do and say, the better—let the brickbats fall where they may.

I have observed a good many acts on the Washington scene that got top billing—and deserved it. I have also listened to a lot of pretty sad comedians and seen a lot of hams.

But on the whole I believe that, regardless of who happens to be in the cast, taking it all in all, it's a pretty high class drama. In fact, I think as we compare the Washington program with most of those that are offered by the other capitals of the world, it's really the greatest show on earth.

However, during campaign time I must admit I would rather be right (where I am) than President. On any ticket.

Now don't think I am objecting to our good old knock-down, drag-out method of electing Presidents or any other officials. I not only think it's a wonderful thing that we have this free-for-all every four years, but I think both parties would wither on the vine if we didn't.

In fact I think the abandonment of our method would probably bring crashing to the ground the palladium of our republic, would destroy our opportunity to pursue life, liberty and happiness—and the weekly pay envelope—and would reduce these United States to such a condition that the Indians wouldn't take the property back if we offered it to them.

I base this statement not upon mere guess but upon sound scientific studies of the question of why we behave like human beings (when we do).

Now I don't know how far you will go along with the psychiatrists who claim your athlete's foot is due to a complex created when you were two years old by having your big brother drop a baseball bat on your toe. Nevertheless I think one thing has been established by psychiatry—a truism confirmed by writers and poets of all ages and which you can confirm yourself by going over some of your own inner thoughts. Especially when you think what you'd like to do to the man who crumpled your fender while you were attending prayer meeting.

I refer to the accepted truism that even the most benign and mild-mannered Mr. Milquetoast has a caveman deep within him.

One has only to observe one's own angel-child who, on his way home from Sunday School, and in cooperation with the angel-children of one's neighbors, will tie a can to a dog's tail or engage in a dozen other "humane" activities that would give a visiting cannibal from the South Seas something to write home about.

We DO have a caveman within us; we DO have primitive, aggressive instincts. We have the instinct to give pain, to destroy, to take advantage of our fellow-man. The early period of our lives is spent in being taught to turn these instincts to good purpose. The psychologists call it "sublimating" them. The sadistic inclination of a medical student can be transmuted, under the influence of civilized society, to make him the finest surgeon.

The desire to plunder and rob and destroy, common to even the most angelic little ones, can be channeled into the ingenuity by which the engineer moves mountains and captains of industry push railways through the forest, and thus benefit instead of harm mankind.

Do you suppose we could put on that greatest of all exhibitions—a World Series game—if it weren't for the old cave-man?

I have heard it said that baseball has become the monarch of sports because it brings into play so many of the primitive emotions. First, we have pursuit, without which primitive man could not get the food necessary to sustain himself and his family (or even a wife to raise the family).

Then—another primitive pastime used in baseball—pity the poor cave-man who couldn't accurately heave a rock! It only requires plenty of practice in a summer camp plus what was learned in the sandlot to turn that basic desire into the ability to pitch a no-hit, no-run game.

Take one more example. As the cave-man progressed, he learned to use a club. So there it is—base runner, pitcher, batsman.

Primitive Urges Basic in Democracy

Just as the sublimation of primitive instinct has formed the great sport of the greatest democracy in the world—so the sublimation of some of these instincts behind ancient tribal customs has made our democracy itself possible.

In a successful democracy, instincts are not repressed. They are merely modified so that they fit into a human and humane society.

As you know, by the time man had reached the point where he had organized himself into a clan, it was the "papa" who ran things. He was the chief because he had the one quality most essential in those days of self and group protection—strength.

His term of office was not limited by statute. Some of the chiefs even ran for a fourth term.

But as the "papa" grew older—if not wiser—he also grew weaker. But his sons were growing stronger. Finally they felt it was time to hold an election. (They had had their primaries of course, and had picked a candidate). Then the campaign began. It was usually quite short—but very snappy. Both candidates were armed with good-sized clubs. The debate took place at some point where the non-voting but interested electorate (this was before women's suffrage) could watch with as little personal danger as possible.

Of course the best man finally won. Inauguration ceremonies took place immediately, attended by all of the tribe except a couple who were delegated to bury the defeated candidate. Then the younger brothers and the females settled down to maintain peace, prosperity, and the pursuit of happiness.

Let me quote one or two paragraphs from the work of that very fascinating book by Dr. Gregory Zilboorg — "Mind, Medicine, and Man."

"It is difficult to find any function of our democratic society which surpasses or even approximates an electoral campaign in intensity and blatancy of aggression. Acrimony, anger, hate, slander, venality appear — everything except actual homicide. The proverbial lid is literally off the reservoir of patricidal drives, and society hurls itself on its symbolic victim with all the energy of a primitive cannibal. It is primitive cannibalism, whether it expresses itself in campaign slander, whispering campaigns, political maneuvering, or flattery of the indolent who do not care. A father is to be killed by way of democratic ceremonial, and a new one will at once be set up by way of the same ceremonial."

In other words, we had a healthy fight in November and got it out of our systems. The cave-man within us was satisfied. We've got ourselves a President, and nobody has committed murder.

And there in we have an advantage not shared by some other countries. For here, even between elections, we allow the cave-man to roar unmuzzled in the press, over the radio, and from the rostrum. He can brandish his verbal club and hurl his barbed epithets in the very face of the President, the congress, and the town meeting.

And thereby, likewise, we prove our strength, a strength which derives not from the atomic bomb, but from a power that can and does penetrate peacefully even through an iron curtain.

A married man is a better adapter than a single man, says the American Machinist. He probably has learned that it is adapt or increase Fido's housing problem.

Honey During the Ages

Interesting are the stories of symbolic ceremonies associated with weddings among people of Asia, Africa, and Europe. Not the least of these tells of the part played by honey. Honey was respected as an important commodity, as a symbol of sweetness in family relations and of protection against evil spirits, and as a food. History records that in the marriage contracts of ancient Egypt the bridegroom has to promise his bride a definite amount of honey each year. Among the Hindus and certain Central European people honey was used to bless the home or anoint the bridal couple. In Rome and among the Slavs honey or a honey beverage was served to the bride and the bridegroom as a special part of the ceremony. In a few countries some of these and similar customs still persist.

'Best Way for Farmers to Market'

...says Leroy C. Hanson, Wisconsin creamery operator

From long experience in dealing through LAND O' LAKES Creameries, Mr. Hansen, operator of the Luck Co-operative Creamery, knows what he's talking about. "Over the years," he has found, "LAND O'LAKES offers farmers and co-operatives the best marketing advantages"—because through co-operating in LAND O'LAKES they make savings at three levels: manufacture, distribution and sales. "We receive help in our quality program and production problems, too," Mr. Hansen says, "and we always get a fair deal because LAND O'LAKES is our own organization."

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

To Dunk or Not To Dunk?

Dunking doughnuts is Sober Hopkins' favorite morning pastime ... and for a long time Ma Hopkins has been trying to break him of the habit. Feels it sets a bad example for the children.

So one morning she puts a heavy frosting of chocolate on the doughnuts ... figuring that will stop him. Sober thinks it over for a while and then: Dunk! Taste? Smile!! And Sober compliments the missus on the lovely mocha flavor!

I guess there'll always be two schools of thought: to dunk or not to dunk. But from where I sit, it's a matter of personal choice and taste—like some folks prefer beer to cider, ale to beer. And the less we criticize those differences of taste, the better.

In fact, Ma Hopkins got so curious about the flavor of chocolate-covered doughnuts dunked in coffee, that she tried it herself. Now—you've guessed it—she's a daily dunker, too!

Hunters Take Heed

If a sportsman true you'd be
Listen carefully to me
Never, never let your gun
Pointed be at anyone;
That it may unloaded be
Matters not the least to me.
When a hedge or fence you cross.
Though at times it cause a loss,
From your gun the cartridge take
For the greater safety's sake
Calm and steady always be
Never shoot where you can't see
Keep your place and silent be
Game can hear and game can see;
You may kill or you may miss,
But at all times think of this—
All the wild game ever bred
Won't repay for one man dead.

Typha Plant Burns Down

Fire completely destroyed the Typha Plant here on Friday. The plant was owned by O. T. Ness and son and was at the present time processing and baling a carload for a firm in Oklahoma who orders two carloads a year. Sparks from an electric motor was the cause of the fire and Leonard Ness and Clarence Bottom made some heroic efforts at putting it out. The fire spread rapidly in the dust filled air and the building was ablaze in a few minutes. There was a north wind and only the fireproof construction of the Cities Service Oil Station saved that building.

Fire fighting equipment was rushed here from Thief River Falls and also from the Mud Lake Refuge headquarters which saved the fire from spreading to nearby buildings.

The biggest loss in actual cash was the full line of farming machinery repairs which was in the building and which takes a while to replace. Mr. Ness and son have been dealers for farm machinery and repairs for a number of years.

The building was built by David Payne about 35 years ago and used as a lumber yard. He sold out to Hanson and Barzen Lumber Co. who employed C. L. Sandberg as manager until 1920 when Mr. Sandberg bought the business and kept it until his death. A. P. Thompson then managed the place for Tangreen Lumber Co. Four years ago Mr. Ness and son purchased the building to house their Typha plant.

Mr. Ness, aided by his sons Leonard and Orlin, intend to begin constructing a temporary building for processing and baling Typha at once. Their large warehouse is full of nice dry cattails and orders waiting to be filled. Mr. Ness has always been the type of a man that has come out of it with greater strength whenever he has had a setback. In March they expect to begin erecting a fireproof permanent building.

The record books and papers were all saved. A small percentage of the loss will be recovered by insurance.

What seemed to be a catastrophe to the village of Holt, to lose one of its business places by fire, will probably, after all, be a factor in gaining more strength and confidence in getting this new type of business established. When it gets the proper outlet, Holt will prosper as the source of supply of the raw material is unlimited in this area. Much knowledge has been gained by the past few years of experimenting with the product, and its usefulness is becoming more and more known throughout the manufacturing world.

Deer Hunting Season Opens

Minnesota deer hunters, probably in excess of 150,000 plus a few hundred non-resident visitors, will open the deer hunting season at sunrise Saturday November 20. The season ends Nov. 28 and is from sunrise to sunset each day.

The following parks and refuges are opened to hunting: Itasca State Park, the public hunting grounds of the Red Lake Game Refuge, the Whitewater Game Refuge and the Carlos Avery Game Refuge.

General big game regulations are: Every hunter must have a big game license. He may take one deer any age or sex.

The hunter may use a rifle with a caliber larger than 23 and shell must be not less than 1½ in. in length. Any shell 35 caliber and over may be used regardless of length. A shotgun with a single slug, or a bow and arrow may be used.

For periods of ten days before and five days after the regular big game season, it is illegal in the areas open to deer hunting to carry or have in possession rifles or shotguns with slugs unless they are unloaded or broken down, or in a gun case.

Deer cannot be hunted from an artificial platform more than six feet from the ground or with the aid of dogs or horses.

Every hunter must wear a cap 50 % of which is red and a jacket 50 % of which is red excluding the sleeves.

The tag must be put on before the deer can be transported.

Mrs. V. E. Johnson spent a few days at St. Lukes hospital at Thief River Falls last week receiving treatments for a stomach ailment.

Sunday dinner guests at the G. O. Erickson home were Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Conklin and Oscar Furr.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

It's Your Fight, Too!

Bing Crowley was "beefing" the other day about all that Our Town's doing in the way of sending food and clothes to Europe. Bing felt that those struggling democracies should look after themselves.

But most agreed with Judge Cunningham who said: "So long as any family or individual in Europe is helping hold the line for freedom—against the forces of intolerance—it's common sense, and common decency, to help 'em."

Because that's everybody's fight: To see that individual freedom is preserved in every aspect, big or little—whether it's the right to vote, or the right to enjoy a temperate glass of beer or ale with friends.

And from where I sit, no liberty's too small to overlook. Because the minute one small freedom is threatened, all the others are in jeopardy—just as the minute one small country loses freedom, all its neighbors are in danger!

Lots of Tin Cans

Last year almost 26 billion tin cans were made in this country, a boost of nine million over the prewar average yearly output. This increase has been made despite tin and steel limitations because of new developments in soldering and the electrolytic method of coating steel plate with less tin.

Home-Canned Foods

Well-stocked shelves of home-canned foods are a form of household insurance. They help reduce the amount of money spent for food and add variety to daily meals. They also contribute to general health by supplying foods needed all the year round.

Disease of Mink

Fatty degeneration of the liver is a common disease of ranch-bred mink. It is rare in wild mink, and occurs on all the mink ranches of North America. It is a wasting disease, obviously caused by unbalanced diet. Mortality ranges from 8 to 20 per cent.

African Blast Furnaces

It would require 225,000 workers operating the one-man "blast furnaces" of north central Africa to make 1,000 tons of pig iron in a day. One modern blast furnace in this country can equal that performance.

Rich and Undeveloped

Africa is one of the richest but most undeveloped continents in the world. Although white men have taken hundreds of millions of dollars worth of minerals and other materials from it, its resources have hardly been touched.

U. S., Lumber Importer

Although the United States has traditionally been a net exporter of lumber, the situation has been reversed since 1941, with the imports since that year averaging about twice the exports.

Industrious Mole

To perform a work equal to that of a mole, a man, in size comparison, would have to dig a tunnel wide enough to permit the passage of his body and 37 miles long, in a single night.

Free Speech in 1798

Alien and sedition laws, passed in 1798, made it a crime to criticize the President and congress. The laws were fought bitterly and soon repealed.

Close-Grained Woods

Among the woods that are particularly close-grained are beech, paper birch, cedar, crabapple, slippery elm, shellback hickory, holly, persimmon and white pine.

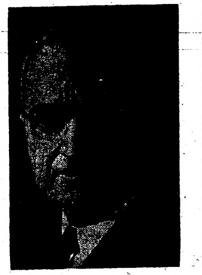
THE FIGHTING PRESIDENT

U. S. Elects Truman, Democratic Congress

"Now maybe you would like to know why I have made this fight for the people. I will try to tell you. It is a matter of the things I believe in."

President Harry S. Truman spoke those words to the nation's voters on the night before election. And he believed hard enough to get himself re-elected to another term in the White House.



He fought and won

Perhaps he made a wish on a star, too; but in the end it was his own dogged, courageous fight that won him what amounted to a mandate to serve.

His 371 speeches and 31,500 miles of campaign travel, his will to win, his unflagging conviction that he would win and finally the justification by the people of his confidence made Mr. Truman's re-election a truly amazing political phenomenon.

He is President today despite the political experts, despite the public opinion polls, despite the lethargy and lack of support within his own Democratic party and despite all the logic that was advanced to show that a Republican administration was needed for the good of the nation.

Upset the Dope.

What happened? How did Harry Truman manage to upset the dope? Following the initial shock of sheer nation-wide disbelief that he could have made it, it became apparent that there was not one but a combination of several factors operating unobtrusively in the President's favor.

The surprisingly heavy vote was a vital point. It has been axiomatic for a long time in the U. S. that as the number of voters increases so do the chances of the Democratic party.

High prices, high rents, the housing shortage—all of which Mr. Truman emphasized strongly in connection with his assaults on the "second worst" 80th congress—aided in turning the people away from a Republican administration.

Organized labor concentrated on getting its members out to vote against members of congress who had supported the Taft-Hartley law, and that circumstance redounded to the President's benefit.

The fact that virtually no one realized—with the possible exception of Mr. Truman and a few of his loyal subordinates—was that the tide of the campaign had turned in the last two weeks before the election.

Last Lap Drive.

Mr. Truman's slugging, earthy drive during the last three weeks before November 2, and conversely, Dewey's insistence upon maintaining the bland, high-level tone to his campaign brought the President a lot of votes.

Finally, the farm states did not come in nearly as strongly Republican as they had been expected to. Mr. Truman had succeeded in planting a fear, in his Midwest campaigning, that the GOP would do away with farm support prices.

Thus, at 11:30 a. m. (EST) on November 3, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey conceded the election to President Truman, shortly after the pivotal states of Ohio, Illinois and California had definitely gone Democratic.

What can the nation expect from the next four years of Democratic government under President Truman?

Foreign Policy Stays.

U. S. foreign policy will remain basically unchanged, keeping as its mainspring the European Recovery Program. As a matter of fact, it would have retained its status quo under a Republican administration, too. But in any event it is reasonable to assume that most American voters cast their ballots not so much on the basis of foreign policy as on domestic issues.

Whether or not much, if anything, will be done about the Taft-Hartley act is more of a question than it seems.

In the first place, although the Democrats have a nominal majority in both houses of congress, it remains to be seen if they will have a dominating workable majority with enough strength, for instance, to repeal or amend the law.

Also, some Democratic congressmen are not convinced that the Taft-Hartley law is as black a thing as it has been painted.

One of the first demands that President Truman and the Democratic 81st congress will get from the people will be to do something about high prices and inflation. Action along this line probably will take the form of price controls—perhaps wage controls as well. Mr. Truman is likely to try again to get congress to pass the 10-point anti-inflation legislation he first elucidated a year ago.

Truman Receives 304 Electoral Votes to Win

During the dramatic early hours of the election returns, electoral votes seesawed back and forth between Governor Dewey and President Truman, changing as the tide of popular votes from each of the states was tabulated.

In the final compilation, President Truman garnered a total of 304 electoral votes, 38 more than the 266 which were necessary for him to be elected.

Governor Dewey collected 189 electoral votes and J. Strom Thurmond drew the Dixiecrats votes of Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina which totaled 38. Wallace failed to get a single vote.

Tabulated below are the electoral returns by states:

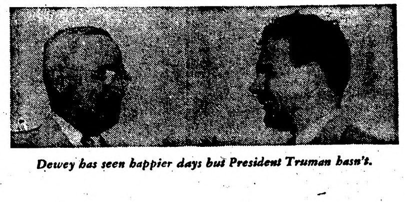
The Splinter Parties

Neither Henry Wallace's Progressives nor J. Strom Thurmond's Dixiecrats turned up with a decisive effect on the election. The total impact on the national electorate of Wallace's "love everybody, including Russia" philosophy was extremely small. He polled only slightly more than a million votes, made no great inroads in any state.

Thurmond and the southern state rights party carried four states. Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina, proving that the Democrats can win an election without a completely solid South.



Dewey has seen happier days but President Truman hasn't.

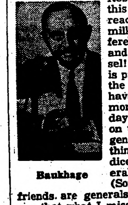
Abolish Post Exchanges? Oh! Perish the Thought

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Members of a sub-committee of the armed services committee of congress have recently completed a highly interesting tour of investigation. It was ordered because of a spirited controversy now going on in Washington.

I can't help mentioning the subject because its background is made up of some ancient vivid memories—memories of the day when, as a lonely recruit in an ill-fitting uniform and sagging wrap-leggings, I wandered into an army post-exchange for the first time, more than three decades ago.



Baukhage

As I looked around the dreary setting my loneliness was not alleviated. I was at that moment yearning for the corner drugstore back home.

I can hardly reconcile that mental picture with the one of Corporal Roberts, shown on this page, as he reaches for his milkshake proffered by a plump and friendly damsel! The smile she is passing out with the drink would have meant far more to me that day than the smile on the face of the general. Now don't think I'm prejudiced against generals, as a class. (Some of my best friends are generals). But I must say that what I missed most in the gloomy PX of my rookie experience was not the gleam of a general's stars.

Since that sad day, I have visited many army post exchanges and some ships' service stores (the navy equivalent), and I was a little startled when I heard just recently that they were being threatened with abolition.

Of course there are two sides to every story. I'll try to forget personal prejudice in favor of anything that gives the armed services a break, and present both sides.

One side is represented by private businessmen. They charge that the exchanges which sell the soldier and his family a lot of things at reduced prices is "big business" subsidized by the government, competing with "little business" run by private enterprise.

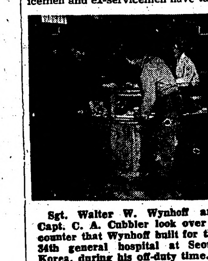
The exchanges take in about $130 million gross annually. According to a recent analysis, quoted by the "Army Times" (a non-official but approved newspaper for servicemen) the average soldier spends $24 a month in the PX.

Three-fourths of this $24 goes, according to the analysis, for "tobacco, food at fountain, cafeteria and snack bar, for uniforms and insignia, and for candy and bottled drinks." The remaining one-fourth goes for all other purchases, including the "special orders" which many merchants object to, "although special orders constitute less than 3 per cent of the exchange business."

This 25 per cent of the total sales of the exchanges (or 40 million dollars) is only a tiny fraction of the billions spent by the American people every year in private stores on jewelry, watches, radios, cosmetics, toilet goods, and semi-durable house furnishings which come under the head of the "all other purchases" bought in the exchange.

The Army Times points out that the PX competition is chiefly with the stores in the immediate vicinity of army posts. But would those business people rather have no post there at all? The soldier spends plenty off post. Enough, anyway, to have the congressman very anxious and very active in trying to obtain or hold army and navy installations within his constituency.

Looking at the other side of the picture, it is true that some servicemen and ex-servicemen have taken advantage of the exchanges. They have made purchases for resale and bought for friends who had no service connections. Also retired personnel have made purchases when they no longer legally should exercise the privilege.



Sgt. Walter W. Wynhoff and Capt. C. A. Cubbler look over a counter that Wynhoff built for the 34th general hospital at Seoul, Korea, during his off-duty time.

Restrictions have been tightened up, however, and every effort is being made to defeat the serviceman who is trying to cut off his own nose to spite his face when he violates regulations.

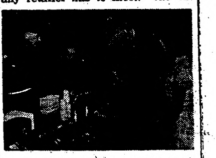
I think the returning congressmen will verify this.

The army and navy don't say so, but it is no pleasure to them to have to take on the burden of a business simply to offer advantages to servicemen and women and their families which make life easier and cheaper. Ask any post exchange officer how much of a headache an inventory is. He would far rather be inspecting foot-lockers or standing reveille.

The biggest gripe the retailers have against the post exchanges and ships' service stores is the fact that such stores don't have to pay (or charge for) excise taxes. In fact the retailers have demanded that the department of justice look into the legality of the situation.

How the department decides has nothing to do with the army and navy—that is, it will be a matter for the civilian branch in this respect: If the justice department says it's OK by them, the merchant probably will carry their lament to the congress. Then the congress which makes the tax laws and is elected by the people who pay those taxes and also the people whose sons and daughters are in the armed forces, will decide the matter.

And there is also this to be remembered: true, the exchange does have the excise tax-exempt privilige, but otherwise it must meet many if not most of the expenses any retailer has to meet. The exchange manager has help to pay and insure, has maintenance, supervision and accounting costs along with a host of other expenses faced by any merchant—costs and burdens which seldom occur to the average consumer.



New off-duty hangout for Fort Ord, Calif., soldiers was opened recently when soda fountain No. 10 was put into operation officially by Maj. Gen. Jens A. Doe (left), the commanding general. Lois Kuykindall serves first milk shake to Cpl. James B. Roberts.

The exchanges also have to make a "profit"—not a profit to them, but a 6 per cent figure which the law demands they must clear over all expenses and turn into welfare funds. Their "mark-ups" are, of course, less than those of the merchant.

The Army Times puts the argument this way:

"Out of these markups, the exchanges run themselves and pay the 6 per cent to welfare. That is, the GI buying in an exchange pays enough over costs to return to himself over 70 per cent of the expense of a multitude of off duty activities—music, service clubs, day rooms, hobby shops, soldier shows, library service, athletic facilities and equipment, and the like.

"The theaters ante under 10 per cent of the welfare requirement; the taxpayers put up just about 15 per cent of the vitally necessary welfare and recreation bill."

If the exchanges didn't turn in that 6 per cent profit, the taxpayer would have to provide the welfare items mentioned above. Or the GI of today would have even less diversion to brighten the barren surroundings of camp or post than did this lonely rookie when he walked into the decidedly limited institution which the regular army post provided where your correspondent began his none-too-brilliant but nevertheless unforgettable army career.

Much of man's cussedness stems from poor food habits which undermine mental poise and sociability, says a paper read at the American Chemical society. Maybe it's time for the bride to take those jokes about her cooking seriously.

A letter to the American Machinist says that when an executive dates an employee he should never discuss it with other employees. Maybe the less discussing she does the better, too.

Hens which drink from stagnant pools lay off-flavor eggs, says the Canadian Farm News. And even their best friends won't tell them!

For Quick Cough Relief, Mix This Syrup, at Home
Here's an old home mixture your mother probably used, but, for real results, it is still one of the most effective and dependable, for coughs due to colds. Once tried, you'll swear by it.
It's no trouble at all. Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments until dissolved. No cooking is needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.
Now put 2½ ounces of Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. This makes a full pint of splendid cough medicine, and gives you about four times as much for your money. It keeps perfectly and tastes fine.
And you'll say it's truly excellent, for quick action. You can feel it take hold swiftly. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear the air passages. Thus it eases breathing, and lets you sleep.
Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if not pleased in every way.

Thanksgiving in America is truly a season of mellow fruitfulness. It's a season set aside by our ancestors, the Pilgrims, to give thanks to God for bountiful harvests.

Here in America we can be thankful, not only for material things, but also for a "Way of living" that is rich and bounteous in freedom. Every day in every year we enjoy personal liberties that only a democracy can grant.

It is only fitting that we set aside one day to give thanks that we are citizens of a prosperous and free America.

SIMPLIFY THANKSGIVING

IT'S just an old American custom, this Thanksgiving ritual, but it's one to be proud of. So long may it endure! And don't let any modern dietitian talk you into substituting baked fish for stuffed turkey, or fruit soufflés for pumpkin pies. Serve a one-hundred-percent Thanksgiving dinner, but select foods which can be used also for a later buffet supper.

For no matter how adequate the dinner, there's going to be a supper. You know that. You know that along late in the evening, memories of that tender, savory turkey and that mellow, spicy pumpkin pie are going to lead thankful folks toward the refrigerator—for just a bite more.

Ways and Means

If you have simplified your menu so that one cooking will serve both meals—the dinner and the buffet supper—then instead of being the harried hostess you can be your own guest for supper. You can linger by the flickering candlelight over good food and good talk, linking up memories of other happy Thanksgivings with these fleeting ones, and you can be truly thankful.

Let's get down to ways and means. There'll be turkey of course. Then order a turkey that is sufficiently large so that you will have two cups of diced cold turkey left over to make a delicious turkey and rice casserole as the main dish for your buffet supper.

There will be celery also to add to the turkey dressing. Reserve the celery hearts to use as one of the appetizers for the evening buffet.

There are many salads that can be tossed together with remnants of the Thanksgiving dinner, but perhaps you would like to make a gelatin salad a whole day before the holiday and put it in the refrigerator ready for Thanksgiving evening. A very delicious recipe for this sort of salad follows.

Preparedness Counts

Your tart shells for pumpkin tarts may be made a day in advance also. Then when you make your pumpkin filling for the dinner pie, make sufficient to fill the tart shells for the buffet dessert. The following recipes serve eight persons:

Celery Hearts
Watermelon Pickles
Turkey and Rice Casserole
Golden Harvest Salad
Buttered Finger Rolls
Jellied Pumpkin Tarts
Coffee, Cider or Hot Chocolate

Turkey and Rice Casserole: Put alternate layers of rice, turkey and ham in a casserole, starting and ending with rice. Use three cups of hot boiled rice, two cups of diced cold turkey and one-half cup of diced cold ham. Dust the layers lightly with salt and pepper. Pour over the contents of one 1-pound can of cream of mushroom soup, and cover with buttered crumbs. Heat until well browned in a hot oven. This makes liberal servings for eight.

Golden Harvest Salad: Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in four tablespoons of cold water. Dissolve with one-third cup of sugar in one and two-thirds cups of boiling water. Add one-fourth cup vinegar, three-fourths teaspoon salt and cool until it becomes as thick as honey. Then add the contents of one 11-ounce can of diced carrots, one-half cup diced cucumbers and two tablespoons diced green peppers. Turn into eight individual wet molds and chill. Serve on crisp lettuce hearts and garnish with mayonnaise. Or you may serve on the same plate with the turkey casserole.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

New Crisis Appears in Germany As Russ Threaten Berlin Airlift; Rent Control Extension Proposed

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

AIRLIFT:
New Crisis

Morally defeated in their efforts to make good the blockade of Berlin, the Soviets were brewing up a new batch of trouble to keep American planes out of the skies over the German capital.

The Russian military administration in Berlin charged that foreign planes had flown illegally over the Soviet zone of Germany and threatened to force such planes down if it ever happened again.

IT HAD all the earmarks of a desperate, last-ditch attempt to keep the U. S. airlift from succeeding in its mission of supplying food and fuel to Germans inside the blockaded zones.

But American officials weren't having any of it. In a brittle reply to the Soviet letter, Brig. Gen. C. K. Galley stated that if any Americans were injured as a result of a plane's being forced down the full responsibility would rest on Soviet shoulders.

THE RUSSIAN letter, received from Lt. Gen. G. S. Lukyanchenko, chief of staff of the Soviet military administration, asserted that "foreign aircraft not bearing identification marks of nationality" had flown over Soviet territory both within and without the international air corridors.

His missive concluded with a flat, two-point threat of Red intentions in the future:

1. SOVIET air patrols would force down all unidentified aircraft over the Soviet zone.

2. SOVIET air patrols would force down all foreign aircraft appearing over the Soviet zone outside the limits of the air corridors and greater Berlin.

The incident was tabbed as "the latest crisis in the Berlin situation, but in comparison to the other crises that have come and gone this one appeared to be little more than a tempest in a teapot. It seemed to convey the impression that the Russians were losing their grip—that they couldn't even foment a real, hot crisis any more.

Not that the affair was to be taken lightly. In an atmosphere charged with hostility it wouldn't take much more than the intentional destruction of one American plane to touch off a serious conflict.

CONTROL:
On Rents

One of the promises that President Truman made to the people during his campaign tour was that he would secure an extension of rent controls.

And scarcely had the startling election day passed before a concerted rent control effort was being brought under way by the Democrats. Rent Director Tighe E. Woods announced that he would ask the new congress not only to extend but to strengthen the present rent control law.

HE SAID he would ask congress to extend the rent law for 12 months past its present expiration date, March 31, and to close what he considers three big loopholes in the present act.

"The shortage of rental housing is more serious today, especially in the smaller communities, than it was a year ago," he declared.

In addition to extending and buttressing the present law, Woods indicated that he probably would propose that congress give him new authority to restore controls, or impose them for the first time, in areas that may be boomed by new defense activity.

These are the changes he will ask:

1. EVICTION CONTROLS — Restore federal control over evictions. Now evictions are left to local courts. The result, Woods said, is a serious black market in rents.

2. TREBLE DAMAGES—Give the rent director power to sue rent violators for three times their overcharge. Now only the tenant can bring such suits. This means that landlords usually get off with simple repayment of the overcharge.

3. CRIMINAL SANCTIONS—Provide jail terms and fines for convicted violators. This would give the rent director a weapon to back up his orders.

Woods was confident that the new Democratic congress would receive his proposals cordially, and most sources on Capitol Hill confirmed that belief.

LUCIUS CLOBB

On Election Polls

Lucius Clobb, elder statesman and political poltergeist of Pawbooley county, wore a strained expression as he opened the frosted glass and chicken wire door of Mayor Ryerson Bucket's office.

"Mornin' and a variety of congratulations, Rye," said he. "Mighty glad to see you overflowin' the same old hole in that chair seat. That upstart Clem Gropper that the opposition put up as a candidate agin you run a poor race, didn't he?"

"You mean," snapped Rye Bucket, "the upstart that you were running around the county winding your horn would win the election hands down? You and your scientific barber poll. Ha!" The mayor snorted stridently.

"Now, Rye," said Mister Clobb with some dignity, "you shouldn't talk like that. I voted for you. Or I would've if I hadn't sneezed in the voting booth and blew out the candle so I couldn't see where I was making an X. Turned out that I didn't get an X in any one of those denged circles."

"And what about your (yuk) barber poll?" yukked the mayor.

"Well, now that was what I thought was a genuine scientific poll from which I thought sure I could predict the outcome of the election. I was so blamed objective that I didn't ask nobody nothin'."

"Then how in the name o' Harry could you get any opinions?"

Mister Clobb combed his whiskers reflectively. "That's why I called it a barber poll," he said. "Day after day I set in Ebenezer Snock's barber shop and watched people get haircuts. I figured I had a system.

"When a man come in and said to Eb, 'Clippers all around, Eb,' I figgered him for a Demmycrat. And anybody who come in and asked to have the sideburns left on—well, what could he be but a Republican? I thought they'd vote accordin' to their haircuts.

"Beauty of the system was that it didn't involve no subtile unknown quantities like the quick shiftin' of a man's opinion or the deep currents that flow beneath a man's conscious thinkin'."

"Yeah, a beautiful system, Mr. Clobb," sighed the mayor in a more kindly tone. "I'm kinda sorry it didn't work out right."

"Thanks, Rye," murmured the elder statesman, and his whiskers twitched. "It was beautiful. A beautiful system."

INDICTED:
Thomas

Red - fighting Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. Y.), chairman of the house un-American activities committee, was in hot water, and it was making his neck as red as the political complexion of any Communist he had ever pointed a finger at.

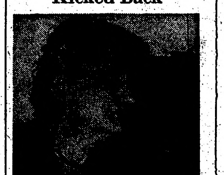
AFTER two months of ominous rumblings to the effect that something dire was in store for the GOP congressman who had caused the administration so much trouble by shouting that the government was employing Communists, the news broke: Thomas was charged by a federal grand jury of conspiring to pad the payroll of his congressional office.

The indictment accused Thomas and his former secretary, Miss Helen Campbell, of conspiring to maintain fictitious employees in Thomas' office so the salaries paid to these persons could be diverted into Thomas' bank account.

At his Allendale, N. J., home, Thomas growled, "I have nothing to say at this moment." But he would have an opportunity to speak when his trial got under way, probably in January.

Meanwhile, it appeared certain that the spectacular Communist spy investigation which held the national spotlight last summer now was deader than a month-old red herring.

Kicked Back



Miss Helen Campbell, ex-secretary to Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), is involved with the congressman in a federal grand jury indictment on charges that he "induced" her and another employee to "kick back" their salaries to him.

Strides Made in Production of Electricity

While the output of electricity has more than doubled in the past eight years and has been rising to new record heights for each successive month, the unit cost to consumers is less than before the war.

In a recapitulation of strides made by the industry, an article in the November issue of "Business Comment," bulletin of the Northern Trust company, states that power production during the first nine months of 1948 was about 11 per cent above the corresponding period in 1947. Output in 1947 was 15 per cent above 1946.

The electric power industry now serves more than 40 million customers, contrasted with 29.1 million customers as of December 31, 1939, an increase of more than one-third.

The U. S. Vice Presidency Called an 'Unimportant' Job

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Just what are the thoughts of a vice president of the United States between the time of his election and the time he walks in and makes his opening address to the United States senate?

"There can be great judges, great governors, great senators, great representatives and great presidents. A vice president may move into the presidency and be a great President. A great man may be vice president, but he can't be a great vice president, because the office in itself is unimportant. In my judgment, the four most potent offices in the nation are: The President, the speaker of the house, the majority leader of the senate, and the chief justice of the United States."

These were the remarks of former Vice President Garner as quoted by Bascom Timmons in his book, "Garner of Texas."

When "Cactus Jack" gave up the speakership of the house to accept the vice presidential nomination he called the office "a no-man's land somewhere between the legislative and the executive branch."

BAUKHAGE

I don't know whether Mr. Garner was any more reluctant to accept the vice presidential nomination than was Alben Barkley. Or than Governor Warren was, in accepting the Republican vice presidential nomination, for that matter. Warren, in particular, put up a lot of sales resistance. Dewey during the night after his own nomination, conferred with party leaders and came up with Warren's name for the vice presidency.

Warren at first refused, but accepted after Dewey promised to give him cabinet status and administrative duties, if elected. As Dewey put it, he wanted Warren to have a "full partnership" in helping to run the government.

Party loyalty was Alben Barkley's reason for accepting the job. He has been a hard worker in politics for 43 years. As senate Democratic leader for the past 11 years, he has faithfully steered administration programs through the upper house. Until the GOP captured the senate in 1946, his power and prestige were immense.

He probably will be asked to attend cabinet meetings as former Vice President Garner was asked by Roosevelt. Before Garner accepted, he made an agreement covering three things:

"In the first place, in order to serve the President and the country in that capacity, I did not feel I should make a public statement. I also suggested that we agree during my term in the vice presidency and association in the cabinet that I would not make any recommendation for public office unless I was asked for a recommendation.

"The third part of the agreement was that I would not make any recommendation as to national policy unless I was asked."

President Harding had extended a similar invitation to his vice president, Calvin Coolidge, who didn't have to worry about the first part of the Garner agreement. According to the record he was not heard at these meetings, and at many of them he was not even seen.

Vice President Dawes respectfully declined the invitation to attend cabinet meetings.

Curtis attended very seldom.

Garner Didn't Get Far Out of Touch

When Garner heard Mr. Dewey's statement regarding his conception of his running mate if he were elected, the sage of Uvalde said something to the effect that most of the time when he was vice president he was so worried that the Republican senators would put something over on him in case of a tie vote that he never dared to get more than a block away from the Capitol steps.

While it is quite true that the vice president is a member of the executive branch of the government, his chief function is presiding over the senate and casting a vote like any other member of the upper house in case of a tie.

If he were too closely associated with the executive branch of the government he might fail in his really important role, that of rallying support for administration measures in his own party and doing what he can to keep the majority party as favorably inclined to the White House as possible.

Most vice presidents with a sense of humor have been careful not to take themselves too seriously. Vice President Marshall (under Wilson) made a considerable contribution to the climate of Washington by indulging in wisecracks and offering a sharp contrast to Wilson's less frivolous utterances.

Mr. Garner took a somewhat similar line when he said at the end of his first term: "The job is delightful. I like it. But it is entirely unimportant."

However, that was not entirely flippant observation. Based on a long and successful political experience he felt that although the four potent offices were the presidency, the speakership of the house, the majority leadership of the senate and the chief justiceship, a vice president might at any time succeed to the presidency and, therefore, should be as carefully selected as the President.

Many less experienced people in public life and out of it have urged that the number two man on the party ticket should be expected to carry out a real assistant president's job. Heaven knows that the President needs assistance and the fact is generally accepted that a leader who cannot delegate responsibility should not himself be entrusted with it.

In recent years when it was realized that the man in the White House had a literally killing job, efforts have been made to provide assistance. The project was seriously undertaken, and perhaps if the theory set forth in the Brownlow report of 1937 had been carried out as intended, the effort might have been successful.

Originally it was intended that the presidential advisers should be a group of highly paid experts, with no political affiliations or passionate devotion to any cause or crusade. The only passion they were supposed to possess was one of anonymity.

But congress cut out the appropriation for their salaries and the result was the selection of brilliant and devoted young enthusiasts who, whatever they may have done for the New Deal, never seemed to achieve the authority which would have made it possible for them to take over the responsibility for presidential decisions—even in their own respective fields. Few could have been described as experts.

Political Following Might Cause Clash

A real assistant president would have to develop a certain following. That following could not help but take on the color of a political entity and, therefore, by its very nature, run head-on against the presidential authority itself.

Warren was generally considered a wise choice as a candidate and a strong one. A leader in his own right. Many Democrats, thinking with the natural wishfulness to be expected, predicted that if he were elected vice president, the tail might wag the dog—or, at least, might be inclined to register approval at its end of the avenue while the head was growling at the other end of the avenue—or vice versa.

Garner broke with Roosevelt, not merely because he disapproved of the third term, but because he was fundamentally opposed to many of the President's policies, if not to his basic political philosophy.

In the chamber of the upper house, Garner breathed a far more conservative air than that which circulated through the study and executive offices at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue. And it was more congenial to him.

But—when a vice president's political theories don't coincide with those of his boss in the White House, administrative bills are not likely to become laws.

However, no such differences of opinion are likely to harass the Truman-Barkley team. The two men, see pretty much eye-to-eye politically at least. And their respective jobs will be made easier by the fact that they have the policies, both domestic and foreign, that they wish to promote.

And although it may be hard for Barkley to accustom himself to the relative tranquility of the vice presidential job, he doesn't have to worry about being lost in the shuffle.

Not many former vice presidents are remembered for statesmanship — Calhoun is recalled mainly because he quit the job after quarreling with President Jackson, and Thomas R. Marshall for his clever crack that "what this country needs is a good five-cent cigar," Charles G. Dawes for his pipe, and so on.

But Barkley has already made his mark. He deserves a pleasant four-year sojourn presiding over the upper house which he has served so long and well.

Development of Bicycles Traced to 1816 'Celeripede'

Joseph B. Niepce, French physicist best known as one of the inventors of photography, was active in other fields as well. In 1816 he invented the "celeripede," or "hobby-horse"—two wheels and a crossbar upon which the rider sat while he propelled himself with his feet against the ground. It was the forerunner of the modern bicycle.

There were a few minor improvements during the next two or three years. But the price was high and the machine was not within the reach of ordinary folk; thus it became known as the "dandy horse." It even reached America, but the natural crudities of the device finally ended the craze.

The idea of propelling oneself on wheels, however, had taken root. The velocipede, or "boneshaker," was the first crank-driven bicycle, developed in 1865. It was well named. With heavy wooden wheels, thick iron tires and a massive iron backbone, these machines were extremely heavy and they vibrated in a terrifying manner over the rough roads.

Then came the tall "ordinary," with front wheels sometimes over five feet in height. But it was not until 1876—a little over 70 years ago—when H. J. Lawson invented the first rear-driven bicycle. Then followed many patented improvements and in 1877 Col. Albert A. Pope of Boston organized the Pope Manufacturing company, launching the bicycle-making industry in the United States.

Pneumatic rubber tires followed in 1889. Free wheels, which enabled the bicycle to coast, were introduced in 1894. By the turn of the century the tandem, or "bicycle built for two," had become exceedingly popular. The bicycle industry, spurred by invention, zoomed to new heights.

Today it is estimated that more than 60,900,000 bicycles are in use throughout the world, 12,000,000 of them in the United States.

Italian Riviera Is Cheaper Than French

If you are confused on the "Riviera" shores of the Mediterranean, as between Italian and French, this may help: The French Riviera begins at Marseilles and runs past the resort cities and towns of Cannes, Nice, Cap d'Antibe and Juan Les Pins to Monte Carlo. There begins the Italian Riviera, much less expensive than its French neighbor.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Television on the Farm

Buck Childs' home has become mighty popular ever since he got that television set—one of the few sets in our town, outside of Andy's Garden Tavern.

Not only do the kids stay home nights, but the neighbors drop in to see whatever's being telecast. And Buck and the missus always make them welcome, with a mellow glass of beer or ale (with cider and cookies for the youngsters).

While I guess everyone admits that television still has far to go, it's not hard to see that it will some day be as much a part of American home and farm life as the temperate glass of beer that Buck serves, and the hospitality that goes with it.

And from where I sit, anything that adds to gracious living in America—brings folks together for temperate, quiet entertainment—is a boon to this home-loving land of ours. (We're thinking of buying a television set ourselves!)

Be Careful In Winter Driving

"Take it easy", good advice for motorists at all times, is doubly important in winter driving, according to J. E. Darrell, traffic engineer of the Minnesota Highway Department. Poor traction and low visibility make it necessary that drivers use greater caution and generally travel at lower speeds than in summer time, he said.

"Don't overdrive your headlights" is a very important rule in winter driving" said Mr. Darrell. "This means controlling your speed so that you can always stop safely in the space clearly illuminated by your headlights. Failure to observe this rule is responsible for a great many serious winter accidents.

No fixed rule can be given for winter speeds. The driver must adjust his speed to road and weather conditions. He should slow down for icy spots, and on hills and curves. He must be constantly alert for pedestrians, as well as for vehicles that have been snow blocked or otherwise stopped on the highways.

The number of accidents, in proportion to traffic volume, is much higher in winter than in summer, and it is much higher at night than in the daytime. The hazards are obviously greater, but this can be offset by more cautious driving.

In Minnesota the newly established non-profit, voluntary Blue Shield medical plan has enrolled 100,000 subscribers in its first 10 months, enrolling them at the rate of 825 persons per day. The non-profit, voluntary Blue Cross hospital care plan, established for 15 years in this state, has 874,000 subscribers - actually one out of every three persons in Minnesota.

Nationally, Blue Cross subscribers number 32,000,000 and Blue Shield members nearly 10,000,00. Together Blue Cross and Blue Shield are helping 42,000,000 Americans to pay for their own hospital and medical care - on a voluntary, independent basis, which is the true American way of solving a problem.

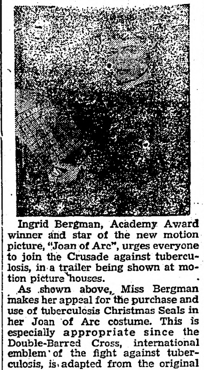
INGRID IN TB ROLE



Ingrid Bergman, Academy Award winner and star of the new motion picture, "Joan of Arc", urges everyone to join the Crusade against tuberculosis, in a trailer being shown at motion picture houses.

As shown above, Miss Bergman makes her appeal for the purchase and use of tuberculosis Christmas Seals in her Joan of Arc costume. This is especially appropriate since the Double-Barred Cross, international emblem of the fight against tuberculosis, is adapted from the original "Lorraine Cross" of the crusading dukes of Lorraine and the original Joan was a native of the province of Lorraine.

A few years ago, Ingrid Bergman spent some time in Minnesota, making a film entitled, "Swedes in America."

Lightning As a Fetich

Fabulous tales about lightning still circulate throughout the world. In Europe, thousands of objects popularly identified as thunderbolts or thunderstorms are preserved in the homes of country folk, who regard them as charms against a number of harmful agencies.

Annual Election Tuesday

Next Tuesday the annual village election will be held. The terms expiring are the three year term of councilman which Hartley Peterson has held, clerk for two years, Geo. Fricker, incumbent and assesor for two years Marvin Sandberg's term expiring. No one has filed for these offices.

Mr. Fricker announced today that he is not a candidate for reelection for village clerk or any other office on the council. He has served as clerk for the over 20 years and feels that others should have the opportunity to serve.

Serving on the village council the past twenty years has been a thankless job for anyone. With a $20,000 debt to pay off, no money has been available for any improvements. The debt has now been reduced to $2000.00 with money enough in the treasury to pay that off. When we think of the depression era in that period we join the villagers in saying it is a job well done.

Notice of Annual Village Election

The annual election for the Village of Holt will be held on the 7th day of December, 1948, between the hours of 9:00 A. M. and 5:00 P. M. of said day. The voting place will be in the School Building of School District 35, Holt, Minn.

The following officers shall be elected:

One councilman for a term of 3 years.

One Village Clerk for a term of 2 years.

One Village Assessor for a term of 2 years.

One Justice of Peace for a term of 2 years.

One Justice of Peace for a term of 1 year.

One constable for a term of 2 years.

One Constable for a term of 1 year.

Dated this 17th day of November, 1948.

Geo. Fricker, Village Clerk.

Brucellosis in Humans

Brucellosis—mainly contracted by human beings from swine and cattle—first became a reportable human disease in 1928, when less than 100 cases were reported in the United States. In 1947 more than 6,000 human cases were reported. Approximately 35 per cent of human cases are caused by eating infected food products of animal origin. Such cases can be prevented by proper pasteurizing of milk products and cooking of all meat.

Abortion in Sheep

Most cases of vibrionic (infectious) abortion in sheep occur in cold weather. The reason: "vibrio fetus," the germ that causes this disease, which often results in heavy losses of lambs, thrives best in frigid temperatures. Tests have shown that at 45 degrees F. the disease bacteria lived an average of 20 days. At 70 to 100 degrees the organisms survived for an average of only 10 days.

Night Crimes and Accidents

Of the fatal traffic accidents reported in Washington, D. C., for one month, 83 per cent occurred at night, and 80 per cent of the night deaths were pedestrians. The reports reveal crimes against women much more numerous after dark, with night-time purse-snatchings 79 per cent of the total and assaults 57 per cent.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Pressure 'Out' in Berlin Controversy; British Welcome Lilibet's Princeling; Farmer Priority Looms in Legislation

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

PRESSURE:
Polite 'NO'

Sore point in all the Berlin controversy continued to be the Soviet blockade of the ex-Reich capital. The Big Three Western powers still blamed Russia for continuation of the crisis through perpetuating the blockade, and President Harry Truman had given emphatic evidence that he planned no further discussions with Russia on the subject until the blockade was lifted.

Following his return from a Florida vacation, the President went into a full-dress review of American foreign policy with Secretary of State Marshall and W. Averell Harriman, U. S. ambassador-at-large in Europe.

The gravity with which United Nations leaders viewed the Berlin situation was evidenced in the efforts of U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie, and H. V. Evatt, general assembly president.

THESE TWO made urgent appeal to chief executives of the four big powers—going over the heads of these nations' U. N. delegations to do so—to bring the Berlin dispute to an end and thus bring about world peace.

This appeal was without avail. The United States, France and England said "no," politely but firmly. They declared the issue must remain in the hands of the U. N. security council until the Russian blockade is lifted. Russia reacted as usual, blaming the Western powers for the stalemate.

Evatt and Lie argued that the dispute cannot be settled within the cramped confines of the security council and should be aired in the wider fields of the general assembly.

AGGRAVATING the situation was the coming winter with its consequence obstacles to the air lift. The Russians appeared content to wait out this phase of American aid to Germany in the apparent conviction, or hope, that bad weather would so impair air lift efficiency as to make it negative in the battle for Germany.

If the situation were to be resolved by diplomatic means, American thought and procedure on the question would carry top weight with the Big Three.

Under this setup, President Truman's evident intention to spurn discussion of the problem unless the Berlin blockade were lifted, would indicate the United States was prepared to continue the "cold war" with the Russians, and to bet with the elements that the air lift would continue to be efficient and that Premier Stalin and his Communists would have to come to terms in the end.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN reiterated that he planned no American mission of any sort to Moscow, and that he and Secretary Marshall were in accord on all questions. The President would stand for no pressuring in discussion of the Berlin question, even if it came from top chieftains in the U. N.

PRIORITY:
For Farmers

The man with the hoe put the "X" where it counted November 2, and, as a result, America's farmers are to reap a share of President Truman's smashing victory at the polls.

Even now, administration chiefs are moving to give the nation's farmers top priority over labor in any legislative program coming up for action by the next congress.

THE FARMER'S reward is to come immediately—not in the future—and the outlook is that labor may have to stand behind the farmer when awards for a part in President Truman's triumph are to be handed out in a legislative program.

Best friend of the farmers when the plums are to be passed around is Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan. No doubter of where credit for Mr. Truman's victory belongs, Brannan already has assigned Louis H. Bean, department economist and election forecaster, to prepare charts and graphs to show the President that he owes his election primarily to the farmers.

THAT ISN'T all that will be done to insure the farmers a fair return on their investment in Mr. Truman, for top level planners are drafting a new "flexible" price support program to go into effect early in 1949, instead of 1950, as would have been the case under the Republican Aiken farm bill.

Add to this the fact that Senator-elect Clinton Anderson (D., N. M.), former agriculture secretary, took a direct hand in supervising drafting of the new measure and personally will introduce it, and it becomes evident the farmer's happy place in the administration sun is most assured.

BASIS of Brannan's contention that farmers elected Mr. Truman: If it weren't for the farm states in the agricultural west, the 11 industrial states on the Atlantic seaboard that voted for Governor Dewey would have swung the election Republican.

How will farmers fare under the administration plan? Here's the projected program:

To protect the farmer against anticipated crop price fall-offs, he would be given a flexible price floor that would protect growers, but would not burden U. S. taxpayers with any extended permanent subsidy of farm surpluses.

PROVIDE adequate storage facilities for farmers in corn and wheat belts to prevent loss of bumper crops.

Extend reclamation and soil conservation benefits to more farmlands and provide an increased rural electrification for more farmers, this to be sponsored and paid for by the government.

This, then, is an extension of the benefits which farmers may have felt were imperiled in the Dewey program, and for which they felt they were voting when they cast their ballots for President Truman.

WELCOME:
Infant Rex

For hours the solemn-faced constable had kept his vigil in the chill of the November night. Impassive in the face of the huge throngs that pushed against the gates he guarded, he waited for the word.

At last he saw a royal page, garbed in blue, walk stiffly from a palace doorway. The page strode to the constable's side, bent over and spoke in a low voice.

THE CONSTABLE'S face lighted; he walked quickly to the iron railing against which the crowd was densely packed and declared exultantly: "It's a boy!" Then throwing his head back, he shouted: "A prince has been born."

To Princess Elizabeth, heir-apparent to the throne of England, and her consort, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, had been born a son. A prince by a special royal decree of King George VI issued several days before the birth of the child. Their young prince was born just six days short of the royal couple's wedding anniversary, November 20.

THE NEWS that Elizabeth's child was a son told the usually stolid Londoners what they wanted to hear—that the royal heir was a child who might someday be their king.

Into a world of crisis and unrest, an age of a dwindling empire for Britain, was born a princeling whose future as a potential ruler is fraught with imponderables.

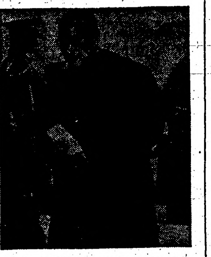
Both he and his mother would be cut off the line of succession to the throne should a son be born to the king and queen; monarchial governments, even of the benevolent type, are fading from the world scene; the contracting empire's dimensions are subject to speculation, but even were these things nonexistent, there is the last and greatest imponderable of them all—the atomic bomb.

REFUND:
Pay Up

If you're an ex-GI and figure to cash in on those service insurance dividends next year, make sure you're square with the Veterans' administration or you're likely to get left in the cold.

VA says it may withhold all or part of the checks of two groups of veterans—those who have received overpayments for education or training subsistence and those who have defaulted on GI loans.

Day of Judgment



Hideki Tojo, former prime minister and top war lord of Japan, was found guilty of wartime atrocities by an allied tribunal in Tokyo and was sentenced to death by hanging. He is the last survivor of the infamous Hitler-Mussolini-Tojo axis.

Missing Link?

Anthropologists appear to have turned up another "missing link" in the evolution of man.

The latest find, discovered in an ancient Transvaal cave in South Africa, may provide a clue to the earliest known of man's ancestors. The bones of this prehistoric creature, who may have lived a million years ago, indicate he might have been a "man-ape" who carried weapons and built fires.

Washington Digest

The Election Has Changed Both Democrats and GOP

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—There are two experiences which no one should miss if he can help it. Coming into Paris, the "city of light," and Washington, "the city of magnificent distances," at twilight by airplane.

Lately I dropped down from the clouds upon Washington, with the lingering embrace of southern sunlight about me. The tiny sparkling lights below winked their welcome. But this esthetic experience ended bruskly when I left the airport. The winking lights stared, and by the time I reached the National Press club, eyes winked but they belonged to my colleagues who patrol the beat from the White House to the Capitol.

BAUKHAGE

Fresh from the innocent delights of the vacationing fisherman, I bragged about my tan, and then carelessly inquired: "What is going to happen in congress next month?"

One of the colleagues answered: "Harry Truman is lucky. He owes one debt he never will have to pay—to Henry Wallace. When Wallace bowed himself out he stepped on the red ruffles of Miss Democrat's petticoat, and pulled it along with him."

And it was generally admitted that much of the stigma connected with the charge of "coddling Communists" was removed when Wallace left. Like the Pied Piper (not of Hamelin, but once of Iowa) he piped away a lot of the "lunatic fringe" which is the eternal headache of all political parties.

The rodents in this case (both red and pink) followed the piper's dulcet promises. But the piper was unable to take his revenge. Unlike the flutist in the poem who lured Hamelin's children away when their parents wouldn't pay the rat-exterminator, Henry's piping titillated few Democratc ears. The voters didn't follow.

There were other unwept losses among Harry Truman's alleged supporters. He won the election without the solid south. The other end of the Democratic spectrum colored by the views of those who preferred mint juleps under the fragrant magnolias, to straight Yankee or middlewestern spirits withdrew discreetly and completely to their jasmine-curtained verandas. This doesn't mean they won't be heard from later, but they aren't the worry they once were.

While no one would bracket the conservatives with the "lunatic fringe," the Dixiecrats did cause many embarrassments to the Democrats. Now they are at least separately ticketed.

The Republicans likewise derived certain healing qualities from the cold douche they took on November 2, not unlike Mr. Truman's. A number of their die-hards died in the struggle with the electorate.

Minority-Leader-to-Be Joseph Martin of Massachusetts, is no wild-eyed radical. So what he says on the subject of change (which is what the radical always wants) is significant.

Joe warned his friends back in Attleboro, Mass., a district which probably will elect him as long as he chooses to run, that the Republicans in the recent campaign offered the people "too many Brahmins, too many plutocrats." These Republican candidates, said Joe, likewise offered too little personality, did not appeal to the people, and formed a narrow circle which prevented what he called "expansion and the opening of ranks." (Of whom could he have been thinking?)

"We digressed too far from the people," the former speaker said, and the "GOP must reorganize in the cities and towns, getting in new blood at every level." Joe was speaking then out of his deep political wisdom.

Social Legislation Is Here to Stay

Rep. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Republican national committee in the recent campaign, gave another significant post-election warning to his party. Republicans must recognize, he said, that legislation embodying social gains is here to stay.

So it would appear that these men, and many of the other Republicans who now represent the GOP in congress, are as happy to be relieved, not of a lunatic fringe like the Democrats, but of an albatross around their necks.

The Republicans who are trying to re-form their ranks and re-build for 1950 are by no means pessimistic. To quote Joe Martin again, he predicted that the GOP would snap back quicker than they went out. They know now, if some of them didn't before, they must keep in step with the times. One of the great problems the Republican national committee faced in the campaign was reconciling the progressive ideas set forth in Mr. Dewey's speeches with the somewhat pleistocene attitude (as one observer described it), of some of the ex-candidates for house and senate.

Witness the embarrassing situation in West Virginia, not to mention Illinois. The New York governor simply couldn't stomach crossing the borders of West Virginia to embrace its recalcitrant senator.

Chicago on the other hand is a railway center and it was necessary for Governor Dewey to change trains there and "in Rome do as Romans do." He did, and endorsed the Republican senatorial candidate from Illinois. But the citizens of Illinois did not.

Had Mr. Dewey been elected, and had the Republican senator from Illinois been re-elected, the White House would have faced difficulties, among them the embarrassing paradox: Sen. C. Wayland Brooks opposed the Marshall plan which Dewey strongly endorsed. Taking that as a guide, it seems possible that Brooks could have been counted upon to vote against a Dewey-Dulles foreign policy as he did against Mr. Truman's.

Liberal Thought Growing in U. S.

The election, I believe, caused thoughtful people to emerge with one idea which the entire nation, regardless of its politics, will have to get used to. The thought is not original with me, but it is one that was mentioned by the only person who did predict the election result (except the man I lost a bet to). Agriculture Economist Bean said something like this:

> The wave of liberal thought which appeared to have reached its zenith under Roosevelt is still on the upswing. Apparently the natural post-war reaction stopped it, but didn't start it going in the opposite direction.

Now some of you may not like that thought, but it were well to accustom oneself to the idea. Nor need you expect the pendulum ever to swing as far back as you might wish. Personally, I enjoy riding behind a spanking team in a buggy "with the fringe on top," and I wonder if we wouldn't all be better off if the internal combustion engine had never been invented. But I am willing to admit, things being what they are, that we have traffic lights and other annoying regulations.

At any rate, when President Truman takes the rostrum to deliver his message in January, he will look out on a congress which, his friends claim, he fashioned in large part with his own hand. Or I might say with his own sharp tongue from a back platform.

Harry Truman went out and fought tooth and nail, no holds barred, for the kind of congress he wanted. The people, whether or not that was their only intention, gave it to him.

And now as one somewhat cynical observer remarked to me: "Harry's got what he wanted, God help him."

He has to deliver now.

The "Wednesday Democrats" have turned out to be Saturday's children when it comes to getting jobs in Washington.

The Gold Standard and The Schoolteacher

by Philip M. McKenna,
President of Kennametal Inc., Latrobe, Penna.

As an inventor of hard metal tools which increase the productivity of men in machine shops, mines, and construction work, and as a business man who founded and is now President of Kennametal Inc., in the small town of Latrobe, Pennsylvania, I believe that money is just another tool —a measuring tool. How well it serves the needs of honest men depends upon the confidence which can be placed upon it, not only as a fair measure of value in day to day transactions, but also as a fairly consistent measure of honest payment for work done or savings made, to be paid for in longer periods of time.

Fortunately, Americans can restore the faith in the currency of our country by repealing promptly the laws prohibiting the use of gold money as a measure of value by American citizens. We have the necessary gold coverage to do it. A bill introduced recently in Congress by Howard Buffett, of Nebraska, H. R. 5031 will do it. Otherwise, we face the prospect of constantly deteriorating money, rising prices, and eventual galloping inflation and loss of freedom by arbitrary controls.

Look in an arithmetic book used before World War I and you'll find the tables of measures of weight, of capacity and of distance are as valid now as they were 40 years ago. The pound avoirdupois is still 16 ounces; the gallon contains 4 quarts; the yard is still 36 inches. The Bureau of Standards at Washington has faithfully preserved the necessary measures for us to use. But the arithmetic book of 40 years ago also had a table entitled "Measures of Value" which has been sadly distorted by political pressures. There one may read "the unit of value is the dollar. Its standard weight in gold is 25.8 grains." It also says that $4.8665 in American money is the value of an English sovereign; that the value of the French franc is $.193 and that of the German mark is $.2385. The arithmetic book concludes that since all these currencies are valued in gold it is "a simple and interesting calculation for the student to determine the exchange value of the English sovereign in French francs and so on."

Public faith in the arithmetic book's statement that the dollar was 25.8 grains of gold rested upon the long experience of Americans for 140 years that they could always redeem their money on demand in that ratio. Our only experience to the contrary in 140 years was during the Civil War, when the Confederate paper money became worthless, and the Greenbacks were subjected to a temporary discount. After the Civil War, the majority of the Greenbacks were called in, and all U.S. money was made redeemable in gold or silver.

When the United States Government deliberately abandoned the gold standard in 1934 and officially repudiated its solemn pledge to redeem its bonds and paper with gold, little attention was paid to the protests against this arbitrary action. We'd had honest money redeemable in gold on demand for so long we'd forgotten there could be any other kind in free America. In our school books we'd learned "Honesty is the best policy." Now 15 years later the evil consequences of this dishonorable act are beginning to make themselves felt. The common citizen is alarmed at the steady expansion of bureaucracy and militarism. He notes more and more deductions from his pay check to defray the costs of government. The schoolteacher, above all persons, should be able to show us the plain truth.

If they do not, they will find their moderate salaries deteriorating in purchasing power faster every year and the pension plans by which our citizens have tried to protect the schoolteachers, whom we learn to honor from childhood, will be paid eventually in money of very little value to them. A bill H. R. 5031, has been introduced in Congress by the Hon. Howard Buffett of Nebraska which would fix the value of the dollar as its present official rate of $35 an ounce of gold. We cannot rectify the wrong done to citizens in 1934 who were required by a law to turn in all gold and gold coins and receive $20 in paper money for each ounce turned in, or for each $20 gold piece. Shortly thereafter, when the gold was in the Treasury it was advanced in value to $35 an ounce. But we can stop further devaluation by returning to the redeemable gold coin standard of money now. Fortunately we have in the Treasury 23.6 billions of dollars of gold based upon $35 an ounce. Our Federal Reserve Notes have over 50% gold backing which is plenty to support redeemable gold money; it is now required to be 25% and a proposed bill may make it higher, say 40%. It has been as low as 30% in the 1920's when gold was freely exchanged for our paper money on demand.

The teacher of history may teach the truth in regard to the experience that not once in the troubled history of the world has paper succeeded as a substitute for money of intrinsic value. The teacher may recount the experiences under Roman Emperors in calling in the money and issuing lighter coins stamped the same value; or of debasing the coins by adding more base metal. The teacher may tell of the Mississippi Bubble sponsored by John Law in 1720 in France; of monetary quacks in France before and during the French Revolution; of the apparently reasonable paper money inflation based upon the value of the land seized from the Church and from the nobility during the Revolution but how, like all paper money schemes, it resulted in chaos and eventual repudiation. In American history they may tell about the brave stand against paper money by Andrew Jackson, who pointed out that it defrauded the common man. They may tell of Sherman's courageous words in the 1870's, "the way to resume is to resume."

They may note that in recent years the first moves of Mussolini, Hitler and Lenin were to prohibit the use of gold and gold coins by citizens. They may show the close connection between human freedom and gold redeemable money. They may note Lenin's remark that the best way to take over a country is to encourage printing-press money in it first. These and other studies caused me to write the following lines.

"PAPER MONEY"

"Best tool of tyrants," Lenin said.
"Debauch their money, then step in Coordination's in the head Disrupt their ways, make it a sin to bargain free. When Terror rules
Our Agents rise, control those fools."

Voltaire had said in sixty-nine, "Relax!
Can ruin come to fertile France
For sixty years then ruled by Quacks?"
Like those today who'd take the chance
He little knew what they were doing
He little knew the trouble brewing.

Schoolteachers, above all, should teach respect for the eternal truths.

Mud Lake Refuge Has Large Sweet Clover Crop

Farmers in the vicinity of the Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge have just completed sharecrop harvesting of volunteer sweet clover within the refuge boundaries in the amount of $16,400.00.

One half of the crop was retained by the farmers, and one half was sold, by bid, to local buyers, with a total of $8,200.25 realized by the government, and returned to the Treasurer of the U. S.

One fourth of this ($,950.00) will be returned to Marshall County to be used by the County in maintainance of public schools and roads.

The presence of volunteer sweet clover represents multiple use of lands to a striking degree.

Controlled burning of areas at the proper time helps to prepare the lands for natural seeding of this legume: all legumes aid in maintaining the fertility of the soil; the young growing plants are excellent forage for deer, migrating waterpowl and other game species, and the final harvesting of the seed crop provides a profitable operation for permanent farmers together with a substantial revenue to the U. S. Government, and taxpayers of Marshall County.

An additional economic use in direct relation to sweet clover production on the refuge is issuance of permits for placing of bee hives on refuge lands. Between 800 and 900 hives were placed adjacent to sweet clover areas. Pollination of the clover blossoms by the domestic bees played an important part in eventual production of valuable seed, and increased the value of the seed greatly.

The government again realized cash returns on issuance of these permits, while the owner of the hives obtained good production of honey, and a further incentive to remain in business locally.

Orcar Nohre and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tollefsrud and son of Camas Valley, Oregon arrived here last week for a visit with relatives. Mr. Nohre, who owns an outfit in the lumbering industry in that area, states he has been shut down due to the long shoremen strike there.

Martin Rantenen and Hilmer Davidson have been busy this week signing up members for the 1949 membership drive for Farmers Union. Award for signing up 75 members is a free trip to Washington D. C. to see the 81st Congress.

By placing lights in hog houses it is possible to lengthen the feeding hours of hogs, speed up the daily rate of gain of the hogs, and also permit more hogs to be fed with the same floor space and equipment.

Ironmaster, Signer

Stephen Hopkins was one of at least five ironmasters who signed the Declaration of Independence. His Hope furnace, in Rhode Island, was an important source of iron supply to the Continental army.

Neat Farm Appearance

Keep farm machinery out of the yard. Locate the machine shed at the back of the farmstead, near the field, in order to keep the driveway and service court open and free of machinery and piles of scrap.

Vaccine for Newcastle Disease

Tests on thousands of birds have proved the practical value of a new vaccine developed by veterinarians for protecting chickens against Newcastle disease.

Protection of Calves

Calves are better protected against infectious diseases when housed in small groups, as in calf unit barns or open sheds, away from contact with older cattle.

Land of Few Cows

Dairy products are seldom eaten by the average Chinese. As a consequence, their diets are low in vitamin A, and night-blindness is very common.

Hog Wise Feeder

Although corn is considered the basal swine feed, the hog can utilize a larger variety of feeds to greater advantage than any other farm animal.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

President Hints Controls on Way As Cost of Living Drops Slightly; Western Mutual Aid Pact Prepared

By Bill Schoentgen, WNU Staff Writer

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DILEMMA:
Sharp-Horned

Perched uncomfortably astride a dilemma having the sharpest horns ever to plague a sitter, President Truman ponders ways and means of getting off. The situation is as clearly defined as it is bothersome.

IN SHORT, the president must work the seemingly impossible miracle of knocking prices down while keeping wages and farm prices up. Mr. Truman is indubitably committed to the former, and it was a great majority of opinion that he could do just that which helped account for his victory. That he will also do the latter is a campaign pledge he must exert every effort to keep.

No less a personage than Henry Ford II has sharpened one of the horns. The industrialist touched off the "fourth round" of wage increases, with consequent high-prices maintenance, when he announced a wage hike for all his workers. Then, Mr. Ford delivered himself of the observation that wages generally must go up and that prices must do likewise.

THE PATTERN is clear. Industry raises wages and the cost of its products goes up. Wages must increase if these products are to be purchased. Labor comes in to ask for more money in order to buy these products. And so the circle continues.

Meanwhile, it is obvious that Americans expect the President and congress to do something about getting the cost of living within reasonable bounds—and to do it quick. On the other hand, labor, which backed Mr. Truman at the polls, and farmers, who generally supported him, are expecting action as swift on legislation favorable to them.

As administration leaders sought a course of action to satisfy all groups, congress said little for public consumption. Methods of price control, if any have been conceived, have not been discussed.

ONE THING, however, is clear. The situation poses the major test of how effective in solving the problem will be the cooperation of congress and the President.

From Capitol Hill came persistent whispering that Mr. Truman's thumping victory did not necessarily arm him with the equivalent of a magic wand which he might wave over congress to bring about legislation in any form he may desire.

Solution?

Then there was a break on the inflation front. Americans who had come to accept the inevitability of the high cost of living raised their eyes with surprise over the development—although it amounted to only the merest chink in the price barricade.

TWO THINGS happened almost simultaneously:

President Truman ordered administration agencies to work out a "definite" anti-inflation program to be presented to the Democratic congress in January, and the bureau of labor statistics reported a dip of one-half of 1 per cent in its cost-of-living index for October.

The significance of Mr. Truman's proposal for anti-inflation legislation was established; it was something to look forward to. But how much real importance should be attached to the almost infinitesimal break in the price line would remain to be seen.

FOR ONE thing, the price dip—unless it grew to miraculous proportions—would not cancel out any anti-inflation measures, such as "standby" price control and rationing, which might be imposed.

Edwin G. Nourse, chairman of the President's council of economic advisors, opined that a lowering of prices, washing out the need for drastic controls, would be "swell." But he didn't predict it would happen.

Another top fiscal official said he believed inflationary forces still had the upper hand. And Chester Bowles, one-time OPA boss, stated that congress "unquestionably" would act against inflation.

The precise nature of the program President Truman will lay before congress in January was not yet known—probably not yet determined. Its general outline probably will be made public when he delivers his "State of the Union" message in January.

But there was little doubt that a return to more or less stringent economic controls was in the cards for 1949.

Global Christmas

People of the nations of the earth are going to see Christmas from an American viewpoint this year through the medium of typical American Christmas greeting cards being sent by the state department to U. S. embassies and consulates throughout the world. Here Miss Frances Kane, state department employee, sits below an enlarged photograph of the cards.

TREATY:
Mutual Aid

The cold freeze being turned on Russia by the western nations plummeted several more degrees when Great Britain, France and the three Benelux nations, after long negotiations, agreed on a 17-point mutual assistance pact.

THAT the U. S. is involved in the agreement goes almost without saying, for without American sanction and at least an implied willingness to help out militarily in the event of aggression no western Atlantic treaty would be worth a "whereas" or even a "hereinafter."

Primary proposal in the plan calls for a pledge of mutual armed assistance by the U. S., Canada and the five western European nations in case one or more of them should be attacked.

SECONDLY, it provides that the pact be left open to membership of certain other nations. It calls, also, for the setting up of military and political boards—immediately after the pact's signature and ratification—to make the treaty operate.

Containing 17 points in all, the program of "agreed opinions" has been presented to the U. S. and Canada for consideration. There was no immediate reaction from the two governments on the matter, but it seemed logical to presume that the idea for such a treaty had received their prior blessings.

Although the pact in its present form refrains from designating a fixed period of years for its life, it does recommend "a long duration." Actually, the five European governments have been thinking in terms of a 50-year period, but the decision on that is being left to the last stage of negotiations.

RUSSIA as a nation—peaceful or belligerent—is scrupulously ignored in the document. Nowhere is any mention made of the Soviet Union.

Nevertheless, the treaty itself offers grim proof of the fact that the western democratic nations have seen fit to construct the nucleus of a great regional defensive alliance against Russia and the spread of communism.

PEACEABLE:
Party Line

The official "line" of the Communist party has gone off on a new tangent in a tactic described as a "peace offensive" by U. S. intelligence authorities who reported the switch.

WORD IS that the Kremlin has ordered peace propaganda and demonstrations of various kinds as the official party line for all Communist parties, organs and front organizations. The intelligence boys claimed that this ostensible about-face would become apparent in the near future.

Soviet rulers are supposed to be setting the stage for a world-wide "peace" maneuver as part of their cold war strategy to embarrass the United States and its western allies in the clash over the Berlin situation.

How much will this spurious peace offensive mean? Literally nothing, as far as any genuine desire or effort for peace is concerned. The Russians haven't undergone a change of heart; their aims are the same as always.

KEEP DIGGING:
No Tax Cut

All hope for an income tax cut in January may as well be ruled out now. This is on the authority of Sen. Walter F. George (D., Ga.) who is returning to chairmanship of the senate finance committee. He has said that increased aid to Europe and additional funds for national defense would bar any reductions. He estimated that ERP would get an additional one or two billion dollars.

Atlantis Debunked

If you take the word of Dr. Maurice Ewing of Columbia university, everyone who's been waiting around for the fabled "lost continent" of Atlantis to show up may now relax. Dr. Ewing says he has mapped, photographed, probed, sounded and visited the ocean floor since 1935, and there just isn't any evidence of the mysterious continent. Atlantis was believed to have sunk in a great prehistoric cataclysm.

No Future to Presidency, Pension Plan Is Proposed

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—Harry Truman, President, is going to be able to consider one measure which probably will come up in the approaching congress with more objectivity than some of his friends thought would be possible. It offers an answer to the question: what to do with ex-Presidents.

The idea is not entirely altruistic, although the United States in the past has shown rather shabby gratitude in tossing aside, without further concern, the man who has served as the republic's head.

BAUKHAGE

Many, if not most of our former chief executives might provide counsel and advice based on their experience which could be most valuable. Herbert Hoover is an example. At present, he is rendering important service as head of the commission appointed by President Truman which has just drawn up the plan for the re-organization of government departments which congress will consider at its next session.

Hoover has served in many other useful public capacities since he left the White House. He can afford to. Indeed, he not only spent considerable sums out of his private funds on secretarial and research assistance when he was secretary of commerce, and later in the White House, but he also voluntarily turned back a part of his salary as President in 1932 when, under the Economy act, the salaries of all government employees were cut.

Franklin Roosevelt also turned back part of his salary under that same act, and later, in 1943, when he was advocating a $25,000 ceiling on all salaries, FDR again voluntarily refunded to the treasury a portion of his own.

But not all presidents are born with, or acquire, silver spoons. Few could afford the luxury of working for nothing and so, when they leave office most have to look around for a job.

Fortunately, former President William Howard Taft, in the years before he was called back to Uncle Sam's workbench as chief justice of the supreme court, possessed enough of the world's goods so that he could afford to render at least semi-public services teaching in the Harvard law school — a position which a man of slenderer means might have had to turn down in favor of a higher salary from some purely private enterprise. His son, Sen. Robert Taft, mentioned this recently when he suggested that former presidents should receive a substantial pension, "perhaps $25,000 a year."

Ex-presidents also should have the privileges of the senate floor, Taft believes, with the right to speak, but not to vote, on pending legislation. In so honoring them the nation would benefit.

Coolidge might or might not have welcomed an opportunity to take on some governmental responsibility after his presidential term expired. As it was, he accepted a lucrative position with an insurance company and continued his private law practice as well until he died.

Most presidents leave the White House poorer than when they went in. Franklin Roosevelt wrote a $2,000 personal check every month to meet White House expenses, and other recent residents have estimated that they had to go down into the old sock to the tune of $25,000 a year over and above what the government gives them, to meet the cost of living in the executive mansion.

Why Not Provide For Ex-Presidents?

When the pollsters were writing off Harry Truman as merely an "ex," come January 20, the proponents of the idea of providing for former chiefs of the United States were pointing out that Harry Truman does not have the private means that Franklin Roosevelt or Herbert Hoover had.

There was some talk that Mr. Truman might run for representative of his home state as President John Quincy Adams did. Adams served 17 years in the house and, if anything, increased his prestige by doing so. But Mr. Truman's fellow Missourian, Rep. C. Jasper Bell, had another idea in July of 1946 during the last session of the 79th congress.

He proposed that the house and senate enact a bill to provide an annual pension of $50,000 for men who had served as President of the United States. Bell pointed out that army officers, congressmen, senators, cabinet members, heads of government departments, and even the most humble of federal workers are provided with retirement pay and he couldn't see why the head of the federal government should be discriminated against in this regard. He felt that in the long run, retirement pay for a chief executive would be a step toward better government.

A Missouri newspaper editor, shortly after Bell's resolution was first introduced, claimed in an editorial that the pension idea was alright, but that the amount of his pension, $50,000, seemed a little high. He, like Mr. Taft, felt that $25,000 a year would be a more equitable sum. Representative Bell's reply to that objection was that if congress did fix the figure at $50,000, taxes would shortly whittle it down to $25,000 anyway.

Mr. Truman may have been touched with what was intended as solicitude on the part of his fellow-show-me's but he did not feel the matter was of immediate concern.

So far as the memory of this man runneth not to the contrary, there have never, in recent years, been more than two co-surviving ex-presidents.

Until the death of President Coolidge in 1933, he and Herbert Hoover were co-survivors. Coolidge had earlier shared that position with Chief Justice Taft until the latter's death in 1930. Taft, who lived to be 73 years old, co-survived and outlived Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

"No office in the world today," wrote the English professor of economics and political science, Harold J. Laski, "carries with it greater responsibilities than the presidency of the United States."

No one who has made even a superficial study of the duties of the president fails to realize how hard a job it is, hard in the sense of long hours, nervous strain, and physical effort. Since the death of Woodrow Wilson, brought on by his herculean efforts during and after World War I, much study has been given to the problem of lessening the burden of the chief executive.

Herbert Hoover has spoken of the "vast and intolerable labor" of the man who sits in the White House for four years or more. Merriman Smith in his book: "A President Is Many Men," commenting on the "complicated and burdensome" quality of the task, makes this pithy observation: "And his job is one with no future."

The "ex" has a value and the problem of finding it can be solved easily by congress without the knowledge of algebra.

U. S. Population Growth Studied

What size population do we want for the United States? Or does it make any difference?

The question is important enough to merit a continuing study by the U. S. commerce department, and the conclusions which have been reached so far appear to have an important bearing on the problem of securing world peace.

"Whatever the future of world organization, the relative population of the various nations will be a matter of profound importance in determining the shape of things to come."

That statement was made in a report by the national committee on immigration policy, headed by Earl G. Harrison, which is plumping for immigration increases in this country.

In 1923 the commerce department estimated that a population of at least 200 million and very probably 300 million could be supported in the U. S. without lowering the habitually high American standard of living.

The Harrison group pointed out that "even if we accept the lowest figure, it is still 35 millions more than the peak which the American population will reach in 1990."

These are some of the assertions the group made in a special report on immigration and population policy:

Population of the U. S. should be 159 million in 1970. That of Russia should be 251 million—an extremely sharp increase. Italy, Spain and countries back of the iron curtain also are expected to show population gains.

For other nations: Population of Germany, Denmark and Finland will remain approximately stationary, while the population of England, France, Sweden and Switzerland is expected to hit a downward trend.

By the end of this century—and that's only about 51 years away, remember — the population of the United States will be proportionately smaller in relation to Russia, China and India than it is now.

It means that the great, teeming population masses of Asia are moving forward numerically with a force and inexorability that is bound to exert a profound effect on "the shape of things to come."

Electric and Mechanical Toys

Electric toys should never be handled with wet hands. If a youngster has been playing in the rain or snow, he should put on dry clothing before playing with electric toys. A heavy mitten worn by a child when using a play electric iron or stove will help prevent hand burns. All electric toys should be of approved design and construction such as those bearing the label of the Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc. All electric toys should be maintained in a safe condition. At the first sign of a defect, the necessary repairs should be made or the toy discarded.

Yes Sir, Insomnia's Contagious!

When Bud Swanson had trouble sleeping nights, and tried to get over it by turning up the radio full blast, he started an epidemic of insomnia all down the block!

Folks finally dropped a hint to Bud that he close the windows or turn the radio a little lower. Bud did—and that was the quickest cure for other folks' insomnia I've ever heard of!

Not that any of us object to the radio, or swing bands, or anything else that helps another person relax of an evening. (Myself, I like a glass of beer with a bit of cheese before I go to bed. I can't speak for you.)

From where I sit, good neighborliness means nothing more than simply respecting the other person's tastes and rights — without forcing your own tastes or opinions down his throat. And that goes for Bud's radio, my glass of beer, or whatever temperate pleasure you happen to enjoy.

A forest is not like a mine or an oil well. It does not consist of just so must material, which when taken away is gone forever. It is a replaceable resource. Forests are living, reproducing things. A MODERN PICTURE

"Take a deep breath. Hold it. That's all."

And one more chest X-ray has been taken. More than one million Minnesota citizens have been X-rayed in surveys, conducted throughout the state. They form a part of a combined all-out effort to search out unknown cases of tuberculosis, conducted by the Minnesota Department of Health and cooperating agencies. Tuberculosis Christmas Seal funds are paying the major part of the local expenses for these surveys.

Family Costs Remain High In 49

The prospect of slightly lower incomes for Minnesota farm families in 1949 suggests a need for more careful planning while continuing improvements in farm family living, says Home Demonstration Agent Margaret Nelson.

Net incomes of farm families in 1949, while still good, are expected to be a little lower than in 1948, Dorothy Simmons, U of Minnesota state home demonstration leader points out, for that reason, funds may not be available to carry on improvements in farm living.

The favorable incomes of the last 7 or 8 years have meant increasing expenditures for improvements in farm family living in Minnesota, according to Miss Simmons. Records show that, after allowing for price rises, southern Minnesota families spent more than twice as much for medical care in 1947 as in 1940, one tenth more for food, one third more for clothing and two thirds more for furniture and equipment.

How prices may effect farm home improvemeut in 1949 is discussed in "Outlook For Family Living".

Though prices of farm products may be lower, family living costs generally will remain high. Some building supplies will continue short in supply, with prices still up Miss Simmons says. In household equipment, supplies of such items as refrigerators are catching up with demand. Home furnishings are [illegible] more plentiful than at any time since before the war. Prices for some home furnishings may go up in 1949 but more [illegible] in low-priced brackets is expected to be available.

Supplies of clothing and household [illegible] are generally good throughout the country, and tho prices are still high reductions are [illegible] to show up in [illegible]. Prices of food may be a little lower next year.

Sunday is Pledge Day at the Nazareth Lutheran church when everyone will have a chance to give a pledge for the coming year. This is, merely, giving our contributions in a systematic way. This system is not something new the church council has thought of, but has been successfully used in many congregations and is a progressive step forward. The entire congregation will be contacted on Sunday. Be courteous to these men who come to call on you. A "thank you" to them for being concerned about this important business of yours would be appreciated.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Cooling to Chiang Kai-shek; Russians Agree to Blockade Talks; Truman Wary on Deflation Prospect

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

HOLE CARD:

China's Missing?

With stakes terrifically high and the Communists having him beat showing, China's Chiang Kai-shek fingered the pasteboards for a look at his hole card. In a quick double-take, he looked again. Was it gone, or had it dwindled to a deuce?

That's the way poker players might have described the tense situation which faced beleaguered China and her generalissimo. The United States, China's only and all-powerful ally, appeared waning in ardor for the generalissimo's leadership. No less an authoritative U. S. foreign-policy spokesman than Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.), who will head the senate foreign relations committee in the 81st congress, had spoken.

PUTTING IT BLUNTLY, Senator Connally had said, in effect, that China generally, and Chiang Kai-shek especially, should have done more to help themselves in the battle against Chinese Communist forces before pressing an 11th-hour appeal for American aid.

The senator emphasized his viewpoint: He stated that the visit of Madame Chiang Kai-shek to the United States was "not by invitation of the United States government." He made it clear that Madame Chiang was "just a protagonist of the Chinese government."

WOE PILED UPON WOE for the Chinese. Coincident with Senator Connally's statement, press services carried the following despatch from New Orleans: "William McChesney Martin, president of the U. S. Export-Import bank, said the bank would not even consider a loan now to Nationalist China. He said the Export-Import bank does not have on hand as much money as China probably will want, and that China is a 'poor business risk'."

Why was Connally giving the back of his hand to the generalissimo? Hear the senator: "Chiang is a generalissimo except that he doesn't go out and generalize. . . . If he took command of one of his armies in the field, he would do more to revive the morale of his people than anything else."

The Texan was but voicing publicly what other administration officials have been saying privately—that they are not too keen about Madame Chiang's all-out propaganda drive to divert more money and materials to China, possibly at the expense of the Marshall-plan countries. Connally summed up by saying that he was not prepared at this time to pass any opinion on increasing the aid to China, but added, "I am not in favor of sending combat troops to China."

MEANWHILE, CHIANG'S Suchow garrison was under orders to sally forth in an effort to save Nanking and rescue an entire army group trapped by the rampaging Communists—but gave no indication of heeding the call. The fate of the frightened capital depended on the ability, or willingness, of the 250,000-man Suchow force to quit its fortress 211 miles northwest of Nanking.

While the garrison was deliberating its next move, latest battlefront dispatches said the government's 12th army group, totaling about 140,000 men, was encircled by Communists 67 miles south of Suchow and 145 miles northwest of Nanking. Little defense remained on the route to Nanking.

BERLIN:

Blockade Talks Set

Hope for an early end to the Berlin blockade flared upward. Russia had accepted a new formula by the neutral nations of the U. N. Security Council for mediating the Big Four deadlock on the German capital issue.

Juan A. Bramuglia, Argentine foreign minister, announced that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky had agreed to the plan at a meeting with him. It called for the naming of a "neutral" commission of currency experts.

BASIS for the resurgence of hope that the issue could be amicably resolved was a statement by U. S. Senator Connally that he believed the Russian land blockade of Berlin "would be lifted soon."

Senator Connally told a news conference that "there is bound to be a way out" of the deadlock over Berlin. He said the argument over the circulation of Russian currency in Berlin does not justify the cost of the air lift supplying the city, and does not "relieve us of any threats of conflict." He insisted on joint control of any currency distributed in Berlin.

Red Mayor

German Communists named Fritz Ebert, son of the late President Friedrich Ebert of the Weimar republic, as mayor of Berlin at a frenetic outdoor rally before Berlin university. The "rump" city assembly, attended only by Communists, voted for the immediate resignation of the acting mayor, Ferdinand Friedensburg.

The United States, France and Britain gave approval in principle to the Bramuglia proposal. Bramuglia stated he hoped for immediate formal acceptance by the three western powers and saw a possibility for the new mediation effort to get results.

THE NEW FORMULA of the "neutrals"—China, Colombia, Syria, Canada, Argentina and Belgium—was aimed at meeting western objections to talks on the currency issue under the threat of the Soviet blockade of Berlin. It was also known to contain provisions for a commission of experts to try to unravel the Berlin currency problem in consultation with the Big Four's own experts.

The plan would recommend a complete and final lifting of the Berlin blockade at the same time the Soviet-zone mark is introduced in Berlin as the sole currency.

The four powers agreed on the use of the Soviet mark August 30, but became entangled in a dispute over when the measure should take effect and what kind of currency controls should be established.

DEFLATION:

Truman on Lookout

Like the horseman who galloped off in all directions, President Truman is sprinting both to and fro in the vexatious price control rise.

Just as the administration was girding to battle mounting living costs, prices sagged and now its economic experts are debating the need to don armor against deflation.

Most economic policy-makers believe inflationary forces still dominate the national scene—but some of them feel these forces are just about spent.

ONE TOP-LEVEL fiscal official declared, "inflationary pressures still outweigh the deflationary forces. But they aren't as great as they were a few months ago."

Inflationary pressures have subsided somewhat in recent weeks, but many government economists have adopted a "wait and see" policy. They want to know, first, how much President Truman will ask for "cold war" spending.

The cost of living is one of the important economic barometers indicating at least a temporary slackening of inflationary pressures. As measured by the bureau of labor statistics, living costs dropped slightly between mid-October and mid-November for the first time in seven months. And department store sales have been below their usual pre-Christmas levels.

However, economists point out that heavy spending for the armed services could quickly change the picture.

They expect President Truman's 15 billion dollar ceiling on defense spending to be boosted, and military aid for China and lend-lease arms for western European governments, they add, could swell the cost of foreign aid.

THAT KIND OF SPENDING economists point out, puts more money in circulation and reinforces inflationary pressures by bidding up the price of labor and scarce material.

The Cross Triumphant

Church Operates Underground in Russia

Millions of Christians are worshipping God in Russia despite Soviet opposition. The Rev. Kurz Szkalla, who recently visited Moscow in disguise, said that during his travels through Russia he discovered that Christians of all faiths, opposed to what he called the Moscow orthodox church, have formed a "cave church."

They are active, he said, in the western part of the Soviet union, particularly along the Don and the Dnieper rivers. He said the underground church has millions of followers, but he does not believe the time ripe to reveal details concerning the movement. Its leaders, he said, are being vigorously prosecuted by Soviet authorities.

Christmas This Year Finds World Still Without Peace

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON. — I've been looking over old Christmas cards!

Christmas, 1945!

The message I sent you that Christmas came from amidst the rubble and the ruin of shattered Nuernberg where I experienced the saddest Holy Day season of my memory. It was spent with the ugly symbols of "man's inhumanity to man" all about me, the bitter negation of our Saviour's teachings.

BAUKHAGE

I was in uniform, the uniform of a non-combatant correspondent but I felt unhappy in it, though I had dreamed of wearing what we called "olive drab" in 1918, once again. My "assimilated rank" was undeserved. Young men had fought, survived or fallen, finishing a job that I and my generation in high-necked "blouses" and wrapped leggings had only started.

On that day, Christmas, 1945, I wrote:

> "I was as homesick as any young soldier in a lonely outpost with the threat of battle about him. I pictured my own hearthside, my wife and the others about the happy tree, my own tinseled packages unopened and my empty hands reaching out for them vainly over the oceans too wide to span."

Everywhere I looked that cold, damp day I saw, not war, but something more tragically eloquent—stunned, cramped souls in pinched bodies, hurrying amidst the wreckage of a city which had seen the blossoming of art and handicraft in stone and canvas and parchment which had enriched the world for centuries.

Now—1945—what is Nuernberg? Seat of the trial of Nazi war criminals.

That was my Christmas, 1945!

Christmas, 1946!

"The second one in seven years when one could really talk about 'peace on earth' without shamed and downcast eyes." That's what I wrote in this column then and I went on:

> "While armies struggled who could think of the message to the shepherds from the angel's chorus promising peace on earth for all men of good will."

There was, indeed, much to be thankful for and much to be hopeful about on Christmas, 1946.

Then came—Christmas, 1947!

I was far away from fields whitened with snow. No bright red of the holly berry. Instead, the burning hibiscus and beyond it the feathery tops of the Royal palms.

The day started not with the creak of shoes over the frozen snow or a wind which "checked mid-vein, the circling race of life-blood to the sharpening face," but with the soft lap of water against the prow of our little boat which lulled me to lazy reminiscence.

We slipped along the river and into the inlet. High above coursed a flock of graceful, never-lighting, man-of-war "frigate" birds. To see them so far inland, said my naturewise companion, meant a rough ocean. These tireless creatures, it seems, prefer to hunt in the ocean unless the white-caps are breaking too wildly.

Out sweeps a fish-hawk. In close pursuit, an eagle, who prefers a pilfered meal to one he must work for. The fish-hawk darts ahead, holding his dinner in his bill. The eagle sweeps down but the kingfisher banks and turns sharply. The big bomber must make a wide circle before it can change its direction. On the straight course he gains but loses again at each turn.

This goes on until finally the eagle, disgusted, gives up the chase and the kingfisher fades, fat meal in mouth, to a tiny spot in the sky. The men-of-war come back, high above us, even at this distance, with their seven to eight-foot wing spread. There is poetry of motion! They are gone and my eyes drop to the rushes. A tranquil water turkey!

We slow down and pull in toward the shore, close to an island swamp, its edges laced thick with mangroves, those mysterious plants whose grim brown fingers clutch deep into the water as if they sought some invisible and ghoulish enemy in the depth of the water. Low tide leaves them skeleton bare. The sun and part of the sky is overcast but the rest is robins'-egg blue and the water about it is tinted lilac.

Trout begin to bite. And the snook! We are very busy for a while. Then the fish begin to elude me so I take up the camera. A stubborn crane lures us on but always manages to hide behind the mangroves out of focus. One more cast! A fine, fat trout—and it's time to go in.

We push back through the twilight. Into the truck and we bounce back to a gay little tree with the familiar decorations on its branches—branches which never knew the kiss of a snowflake, although the spot where I cut the pine tree the day before, a sandy flat, shone as white in the sunlight as a snowbank in Maine. (A photograph could fool you.)

People Await Peace on Earth

My thoughts weren't on the news that Christmas a year ago, but as I look back over what David Wills (who was broadcasting in my place) said, I read this line:

> "The collapse of the London conference of foreign ministers is a tangible result of the mistrust pervading the world," broadcast Wills, "for the conference adjourned without having taken those essential and decisive steps along the road to peace for which the people of the earth are waiting in anguish."

The aftermath of that collapse is still with us and the path which the nations have trod since has led us to an "uncertain" peace at best.

On Christmas eve a year ago the pope, delivering his annual message from the Vatican, spoke of a Europe "shivering and feverish from economic difficulties and social chaos." He talked about "the lie." The "deliberate lie," he said sadly had become an established weapon of international relations. The lie of "garbled word or fact," part and parcel of the modern technique in the art of forming public opinion or controlling it and of making it serve the political ends of those bent on winning at any cost the battle of ideologies.

That was a not-too-happy Christmas for all the world (despite my selfish pleasures and perhaps yours, too) but, if the past year has not greatly changed that picture, it has changed it a little for the better.

It has given us some satisfaction to know that one idealistic concept has materialized. We have successfully prevented the spread of the powers against which the Christian world has been struggling. The Marshall plan, so far, has been a success.

Between last Christmas and this we saw Russia's cold war offensive stopped. Stopped at the Adriatic, stopped along the Seine, stopped in the low countries. Within that time the theory of an economic campaign moved from an idea to a blueprint, to the active and effective European cooperation administration, an efficient business organization headed by an efficient businessman, Paul Hoffman.

That is America's Christmas gift to humanity.

Two of the world's architects for peace, President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall, were the chief figures in the launching and implementation of the Marshall plan to aid Europe and curtail Communism. It was America's Christmas gift to the world in 1948.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Is there any remedy for crumbly brick?

ANSWER: A partial remedy is to give the bricks two coats of a cement base paint, to be bought from a dealer in mason supplies. This is a powder to mix with water. This will protect the surface of the brick only; it will not harden them throughout. Very poor bricks should be replaced with a harder burned variety.

QUESTION: I intend to put in a new cement walk in the gangway, and need to know the amount of sand, gravel and cement that I will need.

ANSWER: There is much more to be said about laying a sidewalk than the proper mixture of cement, etc. For complete information on laying concrete walks as well as proportions and amount of necessary material, ask the Portland Cement association, 33 West Grand avenue, Chicago, to send you a copy of their booklet on this subject.

QUESTION: We had planned to use a creosote stain on a white cedar rustic fence, but understand that this would be injurious to the adjacent shrubbery. What type of paint would you recommend?

ANSWER: As the cedar is resistant to deterioration, it will hardly be necessary to apply any kind of finish unless you have a special reason for doing so. A liquid wood preservative that can be brushed on could be used instead of the creosote, or else a good spar varnish.

For Joyful Cough Relief, Try This Home Mixture

This splendid recipe is used by millions every year, because it makes such a dependable, effective medicine for coughs due to colds. It is so easy to mix—a child could do it.

From any druggist, get 2½ ounces of Pinex, a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its soothing effect on throat and bronchial irritations.

Then make a syrup by stirring two cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Put the Pinex into a pint bottle and fill up with your syrup. This gives you a full pint of cough medicine, very effective and quick-acting, and you get about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and is very pleasant—children love it.

You'll be surprised by the way it takes hold of coughs, giving quick relief. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear the air passages. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

The Missus "Ducks" Out

Slim Hartman took his missus duck hunting the other day. And after five hours of sitting in a swamp, she'd had enough! Going home, Slim reminded her good-naturedly of the time she'd taken him to a woman novelist's lecture, and insisted that he sit it out.

So now the missus and Slim have an understanding. No more duck hunting for her—no more lectures for him. They decided each to his own taste.

It's because they can agree to disagree like that, I think, that Slim and the missus get on so well—content to stay home nights together, enjoying one another's company over a glass of beer and a game of chess.

From where I sit, we can't all enjoy the same things—but we can share those little pleasures that we do enjoy—a glass of beer, a game of chess, some music on the radio—and live-and-let-live when it comes to the others.

Forests Renewable

A forest is not like a mine or an oil well. It does not consist of just so must material, which when taken away is gone forever. It is a replaceable resource. Forests are living, reproducing things. Christmas 1948

Seldom, since the beginning of Christendom, have intolerance and tyranny been so rampant to perpetuate turmoil and Godlessness throughout the world as on this anniversary of the birth of the Prince of Peace. Surely, this is a time for strong minds and stout Christian hearts to remain calm and firm in their unwavering faith in God and to pray for His guidance and wisdom that we may keep this great democracy of ours united against the brute forces of hate and unenlightenment. Yet, let us be always charitable and understanding to all peoples. Let us overcome our own shortcomings and be determined to defend the principles of Christianity so that all mankind may enjoy the fruits of freedom and the right to worship God.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

Norman entered the Army in July, 1948, has been overseas since October and is at present taking advance training.

John Reed arrived home Saturday to spend Christmas at his home. He has been a patient at the Sanitarium at Thief River Falls since a major chest operation last March and is now progressing rapidly.

Mrs. O. Harstad of Newfolden had a major operation at a hospital at Thief River Falls last Wednesday. Their daughter Karen stayed at the O. T. Ness home here.

Creamery Patrons Get Plans

Patrons of the Holt Co-operative Creamery are now being given an opportunity to enroll in the Blue Cross hospitalization and Blue Shield medical-surgical care plans through the assistance of the Creamery Board, it was announced this week by Oliver Grondahl, secretary of the board.

Mr. Grondahl has sent out letters to all creamery patrons telling them of the boards decision at a recent meeting to form a Blue Cross-Blue Shield group here so that the patrons might subscribe to Blue Cross and Blue Shield and thus enjoy the 100% coverage of hospital and doctor bills which these two non-profit plans offer.

"Because Blue Cross and Blue Shield seem to give the finest coverage of any hospital and medical plans we have reviewed Mr. Grondahl said in the letter, "we are making arrangements to form a group so that our Creamery patrons may have adequate protection against the cost of future hospital and doctor bills."

He pointed out that Blue Cross was the second group hospitalization plan in the nation and it now covers one person out of every three in Minnesota. Blue Cross benefits are guaranteed by its 150 member hospitals in this state.

"Under Blue Cross, subscribers and their family dependents receive complete, 100 % coverage of all hospital services except board and room and x-rays, and liberal allowances are provided toward these costs, Mr. Grondahl pointed out.

Blue Shield is the new medical surgical plan developed by Minnesota doctors, and approximately 2300 physicians in the state are participants. All members of the Red River Valley Medical Society are Blue Shield doctors.

"Under Blue Shield, subscribers and dependents have coverage of every surgical operation, regardless of where it is performed; of maternity care wherever given; of the setting of fractures and treatment of dislocations; and of medical care (non surgical care) in the hospital," Mr. Grondahl stated.

He pointed out that a group can be formed among Holt Creamery patrons as soon as 60 per cent or more of them sign up for coverage in the plans. Deadline date for applications is scheduled for January 15.

The Creamery will act as leader for the group and will deduct subscribers payments monthly; help enroll new subscribers, and distribute information regarding the Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans, according to Mr. Grondahl

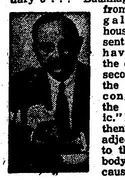
Baukhage Finds Old Dates Of Interest in Year 1948

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—New Year's day, according to an encyclopedia which I once remember consulting, is celebrated in the western world by merrymaking and, theoretically at least, in the meeting of old friends.

I remember when we took the idea of New Year's "calls" seriously. That was back in western New York. I also remember later, when I was a student in Europe, three of us living in the same "pension" (a word which Americans abroad prefer to "boarding house"). We made our calls consecutively so that the one pair of gloves and one silk hat, which we possessed collectively, could serve for all. In that day and place both were essential.

Today I have been meeting some old "dates of 1948."



BAUKHAGE

The first I have to record is January 6 . . . "Baukhage talking . . . from the radio gallery of the house of representatives after having watched the opening of the second session of the historic 80th congress." Note the word "historic." No one guessed then that other adjectives applied to that legislative body were to help cause one of the great "upset" election victories of American history.

On January 7 (my birthday) there was "a bright sun shining down on the Capitol but," I broadcast, "the shadows beneath it are deep and dark."

On that day the President delivered his message and the next day the Associated Press said: "Most of President Truman's 1948 legislative proposals, particularly his tax reduction and anti-inflation plans appeared headed today for a congressional waste basket." How true that was and how it helped re-elect him. In his annual message he is to present most of them again, more hopefully.

January 12 was a cold day in New York which had just emerged from a blizzard. I was there covering the assembly of the United Nations and that day the Palestine commission was preparing its program of partition which was to be completed with bayonets and hand-grenades.

JANUARY 23. At 11:30 a. m. a message came over the news ticker, and such a sigh of relief went up from the White House and from both Republican and Democratic headquarters that the trees on Connecticut avenue bent nearly double. "I am not available for and could not accept nomination to high political office." Signed—General Dwight D. Eisenhower.

JANUARY 30. Gandhi is dead. The priest and prophet of Indian independence was shot to death at his prayer meeting on the lawn of the estate where he lived.

MARCH 9. Truman announces his candidacy; MacArthur renounces his.

MARCH 10. Jan Masaryk is dead. Much died with that name.

From the house radio gallery again on March 17 I report the re-enunciation by the President of what was then called the "Truman Doctrine."

MARCH 19. Wallace attacks the President's foreign policy.

It was no April Fool's day joke when the Russians stopped the trains in Berlin.

The next day, April 2, our counter move: Congress passes the European recovery program.

The gaygreen of leaf and lawn on this 12th day of April are not enough to dispel Washington's concern over the revolution in Bogota. (Remember? A Communist-directed affair. Secretary of State Marshall was there.)

At 10:30 in the morning of April 19, Justice T. Allen Goldsborough ruled John Lewis guilty of criminal contempt.

On April 27 come the rumors of war from Palestine.

The Moscow newspapers of May 11 are bought out—Ambassador Bedell Smith is conferring with Molotov.

The birthday of a state, May 14—Israel is born.

Dewey wins the primary in Oregon on May 24. Later he won the state.

A veteran steps down. Prime Minister Smuts of South Africa is defeated on May 28.

Oregon in the news again, tragically. The little town of Vanport is inundated. May 31.

Tragedy for a neighbor state on June 10. Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach of Washington state dies at the age of 53.

Outdoors, Philadelphia was cloudy and gray on June 21. Inside Republican headquarters it was rowdy and gay. Dewey starts his shock and blitz tactics against the field. Correspondents discuss the mystery of the vacant seats in the gallery. (Did this foreshadow the absence of the Dewey voters from the polls on election day?) The attractive Republican glamour lady, Clare Booth Luce, hurls her barbs in a clever speech without revealing that she and her husband are going to plump for Vandenberg later. Television is most unkind to what should have been a most telegenic subject.

JUNE 23. A heavy mist hung over the city of brotherly love on the day of the convention's crucial session. I had left the hall at 4 o'clock that morning. We had witnessed a stirring and a pathetic scene when the blind veteran, Harlan Kelly, nominated General MacArthur in a clear, unhesitating voice which held in it the ring of a true devotee. Earlier, there had been the longest demonstration so far, for Taft. Stassen's had been the most vigorous.

JUNE 24. I was looking over the public opinion polls and mentioned that qualities the voters said they would prefer in a presidential candidate were those of "the humanitarian, the protector of the weak, the benevolent guardian of the children, of the common man." Perhaps that was a better guide to what the choice was to be than the figures the pollsters provided us.

It was late in the evening when candidate Dewey, accepting the nomination, raised his hand and swore that he had made no commitments to any man.

JUNE 26—The Berlin airlift, which with the Marshall plan achieve the two greatest victories in the cold war, begins.

JULY 12. The other side: a lethargic Democratic convention woke to life with a 28-minute demonstration for keynoter Barkley which "had more real feeling and spontaneity in it," I broadcast at the time, "than anything which even the super-confident Republicans produced."

JULY 13. This was a day of the battle of the extremes against the middle. The Negro attacking the Dixiecrats; Southerners begging for a candidate acceptable to the South. So heated were the arguments on the floor that policemen walked into the aisles several times. The Democrats' glamour girl had her chance, and Helen Gahagan Douglas, for some reason or other more telegenic than her Republican rival, emerged equally triumphant, forensically.

JULY 14. The President finally is nominated and makes his acceptance in the small hours, offering a sample of what was to come forth in the campaign. Many had already left the hall. He called for the special turnip day session of congress. "I have run into perhaps four or five people," I commented next day, "who venture the assertion that perhaps he might still win." But everyone else laughs at the thought. The calling of the congress proved good strategy.

Thousands of people braved Washington's heat of July 19 to line the long, slow march of the caisson bearing the General of the Armies, John J. Pershing, to his last rest in Arlington.

On the afternoon of Friday, the 13th of August, as we were leaving the White House press and radio conference, Stephanove Kasenkina jumped from the window of the Soviet consulate in New York [illegible]. She lived to become the symbol of the escape which so many human beings, suffocated behind the iron curtain, have sought before and since.

AUGUST 16. The diamond's rough diamond, beloved Babe Ruth, dies.

SEPTEMBER 17. Tragic end of a man who had lived and died for peace. Count Bernadotte.

SEPTEMBER 20. A stormy session of the United Nations begins. Its deliberations all but forgotten in the heat of the presidential campaign.

NOVEMBER 2. The election of a President who nobody believed when he went to bed that night—or even in the early hours of the next day—had won.

NOVEMBER 3. A little before noon in a New York hotel Governor Dewey announced one of the greatest upsets in American political history when he conceded his defeat and congratulated "the champ."

NOVEMBER 14. A male heir-presumptive to the British throne is born.

DECEMBER 13. Baukhage returns from his vacation with a lot of lies about the fish he caught.

I hope my readers will understand that the last hectic days of the year have been recorded in the daily press and are fresh in your memories. Hence I think they can be safely omitted.

Christmas Toys For Every Need

Be a careful shopper when you select Christmas toys.

Just as there are different types of toys for each age level, so there are toys that serve different purposes in each age group.

There are manipulative toys, toys for physical development, balance and skill, toys for dramatic, imaginative play, toys to teach arts and handicrafts, and toys to encourage an interest in nature, science, hobbies and pets.

A child needs some of each in the form best adapted to his age level.

Toys for babies should be selected primarily from the standpoint of safety. They should have no sharp edges, no loose parts small enough to be swallowed. Animals with eyes glued or pinned on, toys covered with poisonous paint or made of glass or china are taboo. The best choice is something that can be washed when it becomes soiled.

Great Royal Feasts Once Marked Yule

A modern Chrismas dinner is a mere "snack" compared to the royal Yule banquets of Kings and Queens in history.

For one of Edward III's Christmas feasts 2,000 oxen were prepared. The guests ate as much as they could and the vast leftovers were distributed to anyone who happened to come along. Edward was the first English king to employ French cooks for a Christmas feast.

When Henry III spent Christmas of 1241 at Gloucester, he ordered the sheriff to buy 20 large salmon to put into pies for the Christmas dinner. Richard II feasted 10,000 people at a banquet in 1399. He kept more than 1,000 cooks, each of whom specialized in one kind of food.

Hang Stockings For Santa Claus

Why have stockings come to be a traditional receptacle for Christmas gifts?

Although historians can give no authentic answer, they point out that children's stockings are usually hung by the chimney to keep warm or dry out, so it was natural that Santa Claus should pick them as the place in which to deposit gifts.

In certain regions of France it is the shoe that is put out on Christmas Eve. Some authorities say that shoes and stockings were put near the fireplace for the same reason that an old boot was associated with a wedding—in order to bring good luck and drive away evil spirits.

Good Yule Stories By Americans

Probably the most famous American story is Kate Douglas Wiggin's "The Birds' Christmas Carol." Others worth reading are Louisa May Alcott's "Christmas at Orchard House" and Vincent Starrett's "Snow for Christmas." Christopher Morley's "The Worst Christmas Story" happens to be almost one of the best.

Yule Record Begins In Fifth Century

There is no mention of a Christian observance of December 25 as Christmas before the fifth century. There is, in fact, no record to indicate what date Jesus was born.

Various researchers have set the day as January 6, March 25, May 20, April 19 and November 17. In order to win Christian converts away from their observance of the pagan mid-winter festival, early churchmen induced them to observe the birth of Christ Jesus at that time instead. Thus December 25 came to be established as Christmas.

Real Santa Claus A Youthful Saint

The name of Santa Claus is merely slurring the Dutch San Nicholas, which is, of course, St. Nicholas. American children are probably the only ones who say it exactly that way.

Nicholas was an actual person. He was Bishop of Myra, in Lycia, Asia Minor, in the first part of the fourth century. He was also the youngest bishop in the history of the church.

From the day of his birth Nicholas revealed his piety and grace. He refused on fast days to take the natural nourishment of a child.

But Nicholas was not a barefoot recluse vowed to poverty. His father was a wealthy merchant, and his riches enabled him to be a dispenser of the good things of life.

The feast of St. Nicholas was originally celebrated on December 6. Later, when church people in the late Middle Ages tried to suppress the festivities which grew up around the Boy Saint's day, his festival came to be associated with Christmas day.

Santa's Enemies

In Newark, N. J., Santa is required to pass a stiff physical examination before he can serve in a department store. And even then it is verboten for him to kiss any of the children who perch upon his knee.

In Charleston, S. C., charity Santas have been forbidden to make a pitch on public streets on the grounds that children flocking to see them may create a traffic hazard.

Slavic Dancing Ushers in Christmas Season

Christmas ushers in a season of gladness and merrymaking that is marked in most Slavic countries by the gay and spirited performance of traditional folk dances. Among the most colorful is the fast and furious sword dance of Ukrainian Cossacks which is portrayed here by the dancing group of St. Vladimir's Ukrainian Orthodox church of Chicago.

Christmas Holly Makes Tasty Tea

Holly is useful for something besides Christmas wreaths. Yaupon, a shrub which grows profusely in certain sections of North Carolina, can be brewed into tea and is actually on the menu of one Carolinian hotel.

It's an old story to old-timers of the region. They've been drinking Yaupon tea for centuries and swear that it has all kinds of good qualities.

The Indians before them used it, and John Lawson, an early historian, said the shrub was so highly valued that it was carried into the inland where it fetched a fabulous price from Indian tribes.

Actually, Yaupon is an American holly, but is closely akin to Mate, the drink so popular in South America. Both drinks are prepared much the same way. The leaves are cured with hot stones in a barrel and then chopped up, twigs included, and dried out in an oven. Leaves and twigs are then steeped in hot water and syrup, orange juice, lemon juice and cinnamon are added.

So at Christmas, instead of throwing away that dried up wreath, try brewing it up into a pot of tea.

Serbians Glorify Abundant Harvest

The Serbian strews his table with hay or straw at Christmas time and he is likely to eat roasted suckling pig for Christmas dinner. Weather permitting, a fire is built outdoors on Christmas morning and the pig roasted over it on a spit.

The Serbians, as well as the Croats, have several Christmas customs in common. Both plant wheat on a plate on December 10th. By Christmas day there is a miniature field of wheat which serves as a decoration, usually placed on a window sill.

Before sunrise on Christmas morning, the men of the family go into a nearby forest to fell a young oak tree. It is selected with great care and traditional rites must be observed in cutting it down. It must fall toward the East at the moment of sunrise. It is brought home in state and lighted candles are held on each side of the door through which it is carried.

Corn and wine are sprinkled on this Yule log while wishes for an abundant harvest for the next summer are expressed. As soon as the log is placed in the fire and is burning brightly, a neighbor, chosen beforehand for the ceremony, enters the house to bring Christmas blessings. He pours a little wine on the log and places a coin on it, a symbol of prosperity for the coming year.

Biblical 'Stables' Were Hewn Caves

The "stable" in which Christ was born does not conform to the modern conception of the word.

In Biblical times, places of shelter were hewn in rocky ledges; Judean travelers, frequently housed in such caves, welcomed joint tenancy with beasts because of the extra warmth provided by the animal's bodies.

The birthplace of Jesus was such a cave. Now a grotto beneath Bethlehem's Church of Nativity, the entire surface has been elaborately ornamented.

Yule Log Fires Prevented Evil

Centuries ago huge fires were built in the great baronial halls in England on Christmas eve and the servants brought in a log that was to burn throughout Christmas.

It was customary to save a brand from each year's fire to light the next one with. If the log was properly burned it was believed that the devil was powerless to do any mischief to the household.

Christmas Trees Around The World

The Christmas tree is almost a universal symbol. It is common in many countries and its decorations mirror the cultural traditions and customs of the world.

The Japanese, who adopted American baseball, have also adopted the Christmas tree. They have given it an oriental appearance by decorating its branches with Japanese dolls, woodcuts, small tangerines and rice cookies called "sembei" that hold paper slips of fortunes.

In Germany, where the Christmas tree originated, chains and baskets made by hand—from ordinary newspapers when nothing else is available—are hung on the tree. Candles have been used for illumination ever since the time of Martin Luther, when the custom of decorating trees at Christmas first began.

The French Christmas tree is loaded with glittering ornaments and sugar-balls hang from its branches.

In Italy, the crib is the traditional symbol of Christmas and is carefully arranged beneath every Italian tree. This custom dates back to 1223 when St. Francis of Assisi arranged the first crib at Grecio, Italy, using a simple manger with a doll to represent the Christ Child and adding live animals for realism.

Czechs decorate their trees with clusters of gilded nuts, apples, and cookies made to resemble animal figures, peasant girls, stars and village huts.

Placing wooden shoes on the doorstep for the good Saint to fill with toys and sweets is traditional Dutch fashion. Carrots are left in the shoes for the white horse which St. Nicholas rides in Holland.

Old Roman Holiday Like Christmas

Long before Christ was born the Romans observed a holiday that was very much like modern Christian celebrations of Christmas. The day was December 19, known as the Feast of Saturnalia.

The Romans ornamented their homes with green boughs. Also, the Druids observed the Feast by gathering and decorating with mistletoe, while ancient Saxons used holly, ivy and bay.

Ancient Swiss Legends Recalled on Christmas

Winter beauty and winter sports reach the acme of perfection in Switzerland by Christmas time—and ancient Christmas legends rule.

Legend has it that all you have to do on Christmas eve is cut an onion in half, peel off 12 layers and fill the same with salt. Each layer represents a month and those which are still salty the next morning predict rain.

Yule Crooks Fool Millions

Christmas is a time of joy among men of good will—and the busy season for Christmas racketeers. Every year millions of innocent and careless people are duped by these meanest of crooks.

Christmas racketeers take advantage of people's normal tendency to be charitable during the Christmas season. These fakers often fool the public by imitating famous charities or religious institutions. A few years ago groups of men and women appeared on the streets of several cities in blue uniforms trimmed with red. They used the word "Army" in their name, and at first glance appeared to be members of the Salvation Army. With tambourines in hand, they went up and down residential streets soliciting at Christmas time. They took in a lot of money, for themselves. Not a penny of this money helped bring a merry Christmas to a needy one.

Using such ruses, it is estimated that Christmas racketeers annually rake in over $100,000,000 during the Christmas season.

To avoid being "taken in" by Christmas racketeers, make the bulk of your contributions to established agencies, such as the Red Cross, Community Chest, church-supervised charities and local institutions which have proved merit and permanency.

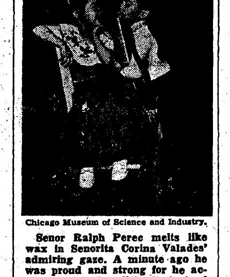
Christmas Caroling By Swiss Brethren

One of the most impressive Christmas customs in Switzerland is the "Singing at the Fountain," by the Sebastiani Brotherhood in the picturesque spa town of Rheinfelden.

According to the Swiss writer, Gottlieb Wyss, the custom had its origin in 1540, when a plague sweeping through many lands visited Rheinfelden. Twelve men formed a brotherhood in honor of St. Sebastian, promising to pray to him to safeguard their town from further distress. They also undertook to nurse those afflicted by the plague and to bury its victims.

Pestilence in medieval days was ascribed to evil spirits in the water, and when the Sebastiani Brethren make their rounds of seven fountains on Christmas Eve they start at the fountain in the "Froschweide" where the plague started in the sixteenth century. Their song dates back to the Middle Ages.

For their Christmas Eve singing the 12 Brethren are dressed in dark clothes and black silk tophats. As the name of Christ is mentioned in their song, they uncover their heads.



Chicago Museum of Science and Industry.

Senor Ralph Perec melts like wax in Senorita Corina Valades' admiring gaze. A minute ago he was proud and strong for he accomplished the difficult feat of breaking open the traditional Mexican Christmas pinata. The pinata is a large container filled with sweets and toys.

Middle Age Yule Lasted Many Days

During the Middle Ages people didn't like short holidays. Any celebration that lasted less than a week just wasn't worthwhile.

The entire Christmas season, for example, was celebrated in equal fervor with that now shown on Christmas day. In some lands the celebration lasted from December 24 to January 6 — Twelfth Night—and in others from December 21 to February 2.

Eventually these long celebrations got out of hand and became such wild orgies that the Puritans forbade the celebration of Christmas in the year 1644. It was not until 1678 that Charles II re-established Christmas.

Boar Gets Credit For First Plow

The wild boar has been revered from earliest times as having taught mankind the art of plowing by rooting into the ground with his tusks.

Pre-Christian Druids, celebrating the winter solstice, offered a boar's head to the goddess Freya and, because of its food value, the boar has always been an important part of festive menus.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Dutch Miller's Back In Uniform

After ten days in the city, Dutch is back in uniform. I don't mean Army khaki or Navy blue—but a different uniform, that's every bit as patriotic and American.

Blue jeans and a denim shirt, for work around the yards and barns; stout boots for tramping through the fields; and a straw hat when the sun gets high—a uniform you see from Maine to Texas, Iowa to Alabama.

It's the uniform of an army—the great army of American farmers who, by their productivity, are helping to keep this nation strong—bolstering the forces of democracy that guard our freedom.

And in their way of life, too, they are champions of freedom. Temperate folk who enjoy a moderate glass of beer—but never quarrel with those who prefer cider. Tolerant people who fight to the bitter end against oppression and intolerance. From where I sit, a credit to America!

100 Per Cent Parity Asked

Northwest grain farmers are spearheading a new national drive on Congress for 100 % of parity farm price supports. The drive was launched as nearly 4,090 stockholders and delegates of Farmers Union Grain Terminal Association wound up their eleventh annual meeting in St. Paul, December 15.

Action was taken in a resolution which overrode the appeal that George D. Aiken of Vermont, co-author of the Hope-Aiken flexible farm price act, had made before the meeting the night before. Under the bill, the flexible supports could be lowered from the present 90% of parity if surplusses grew too big.

The delegates by their action, calling for "100 percent of parity price", made it clear that the parity formula itself should be made over. and that the new price program should be backed up by a big expansion of co-op and farm storage for national security and welfare.

Operations of the grain cooperative in the spring wheat states for the past fiscal year have been excellent. General Manager M. W. Thatcher told delegates. He reported that the farmers' grain marketing operations in the big markets earned them net savings of $3,517,043, bringing the cooperative's net worth to more tnan $17,000,000.

The Grain Terminal Association, Thatcher reported, has added a terminal elevator, a 385,000 bushel house at Sioux City, to its operations. Present terminal and sub-terminal storage space operated by the grain cooperative now is more than 10,500,000 bushels. Expansion plans for the future include doubling the 4,500,000 bushel capacity of the Superior, Wisconsin elevator, erecting a St. Paul river terminal to handle barley, and building a terminal at Grand Forks, North Dakota, to specialize in durum.

Thatcher, however, said that earnings alone do not reflect the importance of cooperatives to the farmers' living. His views were reflected in the resolution calling for 100 per cent of parity prices, coupled with "decent living standards, including adequate health protection, and reasonable education opportunities for farm children."

Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Larson and family and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Sagstuen and Warren were dinner guests at the C. O. Larson home Christmas Day.

LOOKING AHEAD

It Pays to Fight

Everybody loves a fighter. For that reason, the popularity of Harry S. Truman is running pretty high at this time. All the pollsters, all the misled, have had their say: President Truman was the man who wouldn't be licked! Mr. Truman was apparently the only candidate who really took the opinion polls to heart. While the general public was being lulled to sleep by everybody's opinion as to the outcome of the election, Candidate Truman got in there and fought.

An American Ideal

Preferences for candidates in the voting on November 2 were not the same as reported by the poll takers before election. What happened? My guess is this: a larger percentage of those who favored a fighting man went out to vote than was the case with those favoring the non-fighter, who thought he would be elected anyhow. In other words, the opinion polls were interpreted by each candidate—by Mr. Truman in a way that helped elect Mr. Truman and by Mr. Dewey in a way that defeated Mr. Dewey.

The important thing is that the fighting man won. This is an old American principle. The man who works the hardest, who never-says-die, is favored in the struggle for success. Our nation has been built by heroes, sung and unsung, who lived by that rule. May I submit that in these critical times, it will not be possible for America to keep her traditional place as the most favored of lands, unless Americans are willing to take up the fight.

Fight or Die

Why has America more national income than any other six nations you can name? Why do more American youth have a chance to go to high school and college than go in all the rest of the world put together? Why do American workers have the highest wages in all the world? Here are some of the reasons: we have the right to own property, to operate our own businesses and compete with each other, to invest capital in industrial tools.

Moreover, we Americans can work at the job we like, wherever we like, with equal justice for all. If we keep these liberties, preserve constitutional government, and maintain freedom of individual opportunity, it will be possible for us to double our wages and standards of living, as we did during the last generation. If we turn to government management and thus kill our incentives, we can expect wages and living standards to go down 50 per cent below the present level.

Stakes Are High

Step by step America is being pushed in that direction. A few more steps, and we may find ourselves under such pressure that we cannot avoid socialism, and the communism that follows it. Our people must understand these facts. More important, we must be active in preserving the fundamentals of our American way of life.

The price is still "eternal vigilance." Are we willing to fight valiantly by every means: platform, radio, press, screen, and conversation — to preserve America's freedoms? If so, we can keep our freedoms. Otherwise, they will pass away, as from Greece and Rome. It takes a valiant heart. Those who win are those who fight.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: I have taken all the paint off a wicker set down to its natural color. Now I would like to know what I can put on it to preserve it, as it is very dry. Should I varnish it or leave it as it is?

ANSWER: If you have used a commercial paint remover to clean off the old finish, you should go over the surfaces with turpentine in order to take off every trace of the remover; otherwise your new finish will fail. If you like the color, you can finish the pieces with spar or quick-drying varnish. This should protect the furniture, especially if it is to be exposed to sunlight. Otherwise you can use clear lacquer, which would give a lighter finish.

QUESTION: My living room is finished in natural wormy chestnut that has been waxed. How can I clean it?

ANSWER: There are many good cleaning preparations on general sale which should serve your purpose. An alternative would be to clean off the soiled wax with a liquid wax that is meant just for cleaning waxed surfaces. Still another method would be to go over the woodwork with a cloth dampened with turpentine, then apply a thin coat of paste wax, and when dry polish thoroughly.

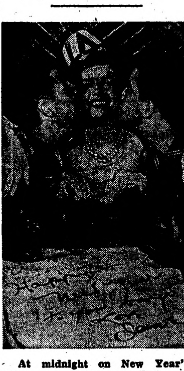
Strange New Year Beliefs Still Exist

Over England and Scotland, in the villages of the plains and highlands, ancient New Year superstitions still exist.

It is considered unlucky to wear old clothes on the New Year; bad luck falls on a house if anyone goes out before someone has entered. If the first comer—"first foot," the natives call it—be a man, good luck will bless the house; if a woman or a fair-haired man, the luck is evil. So widespread is this belief that in many villages the dark-haired men of the community make it a regular business to go from house to house to "take the New Year in."

In Herefordshire, at midnight, the girls rush to the spring. The one who gets the first drink, or the "cream of the well," is sure of a handsome husband.

Unlucky, too, is the good woman who gives away a light on New Year's day. Where a brand goes out, the evil fays come in. The most tender-hearted woman will see her neighbors shiver in a fireless house rather than give away a light on the New Years.



At midnight on New Year's Eve, custom demands that gentlemen kiss the nearest lady. Here's a fine example of army-navy cooperation.

Pins Once Prized As New Year Gift

Bishop Hall's "Satires," published in 1598, tell how every tenant at the dawn of the New Year presented his lord with a fat capon; and Ben Jonson, in his "Christmas Masque" introduces among his cast of characters "New Year's gift in a blue coat, serving man like, with an orange and a sprig of rosemary on his head."

Oranges and nutmeg, gilded and decorated apples, were frequent gifts exchanged among the poorer people. Ladies of fashion delighted in pins, invented during the Sixteenth century to take the place of clumsy wooden skewers. Here we have the origin of our own "pin money"—a gift of money given in place of pins.

Saint Sylvester's Feast Day Marks End of Year

The feast of St. Sylvester, who was Pope from 314 A. D. until his death in 335, is observed by the Roman and Anglican churches on December 31.

In Germany and Belgium the morning of St. Sylvester's Day is commemorated religiously, while the afternoon and evening are devoted to various kinds of horseplay in anticipation of the coming New Year.

Facts and Fancies Of New Year's Day

New Year's with its open houses, parties, exchanging of New Year's cards, horn tooting, Auld Lang Syne and New Year's resolutions, is one of the oldest celebrations. As a holiday it has been observed since ancient times, and has been marked throughout history by the giving of gifts and the exchange of greetings and good wishes.

None of Her Business

By PAPINTA KNOWLES

IT WASN'T any of her business, of course. But the fact didn't keep her from worrying over the situation that was as evident as the nose on her face between Jim and Betty upstairs. She'd slept very little the night before from thinking about them. And now she sat in Pa's old rocker by the heater in the front room, listening to Mike's little feet patter across the floor above her. She wondered what an old widow could do to righten things between two that she'd come to love as her own children.

For three days Mollie hadn't heard Jim step his foot on the stairs, which substantiated the news she'd heard that morning from Tillie Smith across the street that Jim was staying in a room downtown.

Everything had been alright at Christmas, apparently. Jim had shouldered a cedar tree up the stairs that'd been almost too big to get through the door, and he'd said to Mollie, grinning his infectious grin through the cedar branches, "Mike says Santa Claus won't come without a cedar tree all decorated with tinsel and lights."

For three days Mollie hadn't heard Jim step his foot on the stairs.

They'd set up the tree and decorated it and invited her up to look at it and eat fluffy popcorn that Betty'd popped in an old iron skillet on the stove.

Betty's step sounded on the stairs, and after a moment she and Mike came into the room. "I'm going downtown to buy a few groceries, Mrs. Elms," she said. "Would it be too much trouble to keep Mike while I'm gone?"

Mike ran into Mollie's arms, and Mollie smiled up at Betty. "Of course not, dear. Mike and I will play train—and ball. . . ." She got out the little train she kept for Mike when he came to visit her.

After a while an odd, happy glow came into Mollie's dim blue eyes, and she asked Mike, "would you like to go over to see Aunt Tillie, dear?"

Mike was all eagerness, because "Aunt" Tillie gave him little bags of candy. "Le's go—le's go!" He jumped up and down with excitement.

They'd hardly reached Tillie Smith's little house across the street when Mollie asked Tillie, "Would you keep Mike a little while, Tillie? I have something I must take care of at the house. I'll not be gone long."

"Why, yes, Mollie, I'll take care of Mike. We'll get along fine," she said.

Mollie sat in Pa's old rocker by the heater and a strange little prayer slipped from her lips, "Dear God, forgive me, but it can't be a sin!"

She became silent and fastened a frightened look upon Betty who had returned from town with her arms loaded with groceries.

"He's gone . . . Betty, he's GONE! No . . . it wasn't Jim who took him." She managed the falsehood, but somehow she wasn't feeling bad inside for doing it.

Mollie hardly knew what happened after she'd spoken the lie; only that Betty had dropped her groceries in the middle of the floor and had dashed to the telephone to call Jim.

Then after Jim was there, holding Betty in his arms and trying to stop her tears, and the whole neihghborhood was roused with the news that someone had taken little Mike. Tillie Smith and Mike walked in the back door.

"Well—" Tillie said in surprise at the neighborhood gathering. "What's this? A New Year's party? Mollie, I thought you intended to come back for Mike."

Betty and Jim were holding Mike between them and laughing now. Presently their eyes slipped to Mollie sitting quietly in the old rocker, and Betty said, so that only Jim could hear, "Bless her heart, Jim! Bless her heart!"

Gregorian Calendar Was Slow In Adoption

Great Britain and her colonies adopted the Gregorian calendar in 1752; the Julian calendar having become 11 days slow by that time, parliament ordered that the day following September 3, 1752, would be September 14, and that the legal year should begin on January 1.

The Gregorian calendar is, in effect, a revision edition of the old Roman calendar.

New Year's Eve Is 'Watch Night'

In addition to secular celebrations, many religious denominations hold special services on New Year's Eve from 9 or 10 until 12 midnight.

The Methodist Episcopal church was the earliest to adopt this custom and they are called "watch-night services."

In 1947, St. George's Methodist church in Philadelphia held its 178th watch night service. The church was founded in 1769 and in 1770 held what has been called the first Protestant church services in America. Many other churches are holding such watch night services today.

The far-famed Philadelphia Mummers' parade unfolds along a five-mile stretch of Broad street each January 1.

Mummers' Parade Each New Year

The Mummers' parade on New Year's Eve is to Philadelphia what the Mardi Gras is to New Orleans.

The earliest settlers in the vicinity of present-day Philadelphia were English and Swedes. The English cherished the traditional Mummer play "St. George and the Dragon," while the Swedes were fond of masquerading informally on New Year's Eve. The two customs had merged long before the Revolution and it was customary — even among the Quakers — to extend hospitality to the masqueraders or give them a dole for refreshments.

After the Revolution, George Washington replaced St. George as the central figure of the festivities which continued along the path of spontaneity until 1886 when the parade was sponsored by the Silver Crown New Year's association.

The municipal administration officially recognized the parade in 1901, and representative citizenry began turning out to watch and participate in the festivities.

Public Reception At White House

It has been the custom from the beginning of the Republic for the President of the United States to welcome the New Year by holding a reception open to the general public.

On the first New Year's Day after his inauguration, President Washington opened his home to receive the people. Throughout the seven years which Washington lived in Philadelphia, then the capital of the nation, he continued this custom.

New Year Kisses Began In Scotland

The custom of interchanging purely platonic New Year kisses started in Scotland.

In the memoirs of Lord Langdale by Sir T. D. Hardy, it is recounted how just at 12 o'clock, wherever you may happen to be, you proceed to kiss the nearest girl by way of a New Year greeting.

In Scotland, no work was done on New Year's as late as 1904. No porters or cabs were at the Waverly station in Edinburgh, and a visiting noble lord had to wend his way to his hotel in a milk cart.

January Named For Ancient God

The name January is derived from the two-faced god, Janus. He was originally the god of light and day. However, he gradually became the god of the beginning of things.

The beginning of the year was sacred to Janus and a festival in his honor called Angonia was celebrated. At the beginning of any important undertaking his aid and advice was sought.

Janus was worshiped as the guardian of trade and shipping and he was the inventor of agriculture.

New Year's Started 50 Centuries Ago

New Year's has been observed as a holiday, either civil or religious, for the last 5,000 years. Nearly everywhere and at all periods it has been a day of rejoicing and of gift giving; and history tells us that in Babylon, 3,000 years before the Christian era, the day was sacred to Marduk, the solar god, of whom it was believed that all other gods were but various manifestations.

Household Hints

Next time you cut out a dress, secure the paper pattern to the material with small strips of scotch tape. If the pattern gets torn, it can be mended with the tape also.

Protective paper jackets can be placed on children's school books and secured with scotch tape.

Flavor cottage cheese with sugar, grated orange rind and raisins and use as a pancake filling. This makes a good dessert after a salad luncheon.

When you pack a lunch box send soup along, occasionally, in the vacuum bottle. Hearty split pea soup tastes good with a sandwich, and so does fish chowder or a cream soup.

Overcooked oysters are always tough. Stop cooking them before the edges begin to curl. Oyster stews are best cooked over water.

Use mercerized or cotton thread when mending kid gloves. Silk thread has a tendency to tear the kid as it pulls through the fabric.

Plan the lighting in the living room so that each member of the family has his own reading space.

A small amount of leftover ham may be put through the meat chopper and used as a middle layer when making scalloped potatoes.

Coal Miners, Lumbermen Have Dangerous Jobs

Coal mining and lumbering rank as the most dangerous jobs in America, according to "Accident Facts," statistical yearbook of the National Safety council.

Reports to the council show that disabling injuries per one million man-hours totaled 59.74 for the lumbering industry and 54.46 for coal mining. The average for all reporting industries was 13.26.

There were 7.96 days lost per 1,000 man-hours worked in coal mining, and 5.24 in lumbering, as compared to 1.23 days for all reporting industries.

Undulant Fever

Undulant fever is transmitted to human beings from infected livestock. In cattle the infection is known as "Bang's disease." Medical history shows various forms of undulant fever—one which scarcely makes patients ill and another which causes extreme illness for weeks. Most patients are moderately sick over a long period of time; two years of treatment may be required. Nearly all persons who have undulant fever recover.

Baby's Eyes

Although attending physicians will discover any eye abnormality in a baby during treatment after birth, parents should be alert to notice troubles that may develop thereafter. Abnormalities to be looked for include inequality in the size of pupils, cloudiness, discoloration, or deviation from the regular round shape of a pupil.

In Case of Fire

Always be prepared for fire. When entering buildings, choose your nearest exit and alternate path of escape. Locked or obstructed exits or fire hazards should be reported. If burned in a fire, report for medical treatment. Many burns or smoke inhalations which do not at first seem serious have fatal results.

Protecting Trees From Rabbits

Rabbits can cause severe damage to trees. A common repellant is lime sulphur. To prepare the material, mix dry lime sulphur in sufficient water to make a thin paint. It can be applied with a brush or rag swab on a stick and it can be sprayed on.

Commercial X-Rays

First commercial use of X-rays in the United States began in 1922 when, after a long period of development and research, X-ray transformers, controls and tubes reached a degree of perfection that made possible the use of relatively high voltages.

Emotional Conflicts

Even the skin may reveal emotional conflicts. Many patients with "allergies" have negative reactions to tests for allergy and do not respond well to allergy treatments—but they do show definite symptoms of psychologic maladjustment.

Blackcock

Blackcock is another name for the Black Grouse, Black Game or Heath Hen, the female of which is the Grey Hen. It is found in the highlands of Scotland, north of England, in Ireland, and certain sections of Europe and Asia.

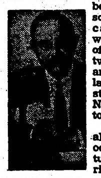
Washington Digest

Now He Loafs in Florida, Catching Fish, Mermaids

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

FORT PIERCE, FLA.—As you read these lines I expect to be back where the quiet along the Potomac will be disturbed by the plans for an old-time inauguration party and the beginning of a new legislative year. But as I write I can see the blue of the Indian river whose eastern shore line is a slim silhouette of palm trees screening the Atlantic beyond.

When I stand up I can look over the seawall and watch mullet jumping higher than I ever saw a fish leap except when the Washington state salmon were hurdling the falls on their way to spawn.



BAUKHAGE

A little way north of here a wide inlet breaches the natural strip of beach and dune, scrub pine and cabbage palm which forms a part of the barrier between the ocean and the great inland waterway stretching from New York harbor to Miami.

These occasional intrusions of the ocean don't disturb the Indian river in the slightest for through the dredged channels come the fish and the deep-sea fishing boats, the shrimpers and the freighters that mingle with the trim pleasure craft in the yacht basin.

Approaching this spot on land you are welcomed by the brilliant red of the Turk's Caps, the flower that never opens — never has to. Perhaps it is too lazy. It loafs along the ditches, growing wild in fields or tamed in gardens, showing no envy for its more aristocratic sister, the hibiscus which throws its flames out in wide tongues, the dainty bouganvillea blossoms, or the languorous poinsettia.

When a crane flashes up from the river edge, a polished silver streak in the sun, you know you have left the northern city canyons far behind. Now the groves. Ripening oranges among the leaves shine like little golden beads against rich, green velvet tapestry. Quite a different green from the delicate tint of the little lizard sunning himself on the window screen beside me. He would match the tender tint of the clusters of new pine needles undulating in a breeze that keeps the palms fanning themselves with their rippling fronds.

I am met in new, blue truck which also transports fish, groceries and whatnot—even a marauding wildcat which has suffered his just deserts among the palmettos at dawn.

Over the cottage great bulbous blossoms of the yellow trumpet vine are waiting until the sun sets to send out their intoxicating perfume.

The next day starts, as it should, on the river. Overhead are the soaring fishhawks, the nervous kingfishers, the greedy, speedy and graceful black cormorants and high above all the tireless man-of-war birds with their wide sweeping wings, like an upper-case M, which never seem to change their shape.

Little snappers are so thick that we couldn't bait fast enough, but we are fishing for our supper!

And so days pass with no sense of time passing with them—trout and a few fighting jacks that flop and grunt but which is of little interest to the commercial fisherman. Not a "honey-money" fish like a trout or pompano, as my wife would say, making a little more euphemistic the terminology of the commercial fisherman.

Bill Turner smiles. He knows the personal histories and habits of the furred, feathered or finny folk that inhabit these parts and gets as much pleasure out of seeing somebody else land a catch as he does doing it himself. And he has an uncanny sixth sense that takes him straight to the spot close to the bank in the green shadow of the mangroves, outside on reef, deep in the cuts wherever fish will be if fish there are.

. . . I watch my wife pull in four speckled beauties. I get none. That's not what the male animal ordinarily calls good fishing. But I don't resent the fact that she is the fisherman in this family. In fact as far as I am concerned, she, not Hernando de Soto, discovered the place. . . . I land a snook, enough! Fried, with corndogers, crisp and golden brown, a salad of grapefruit, oranges, pineapple and fresh cocoanut from the backyard, that snook is delicious. And so to bed.

Baukhage and Friends

Next day I go after a different species of marine fauna. (See accompanying photograph.) Mermaids aren't as hard to find as they used to be before that ingenious creature, homo-press-agenticus, was discovered and carefully cultivated by the chambers of commerce of all energetic resorts.

Although I didn't intend to make a busman's holiday out of my vacation I couldn't help getting one or two interviews.

I called on Douglas Silver, president of the local chamber of commerce. I had known him when his beat was Broadway and the New York advertising district. His office was as busy as one in the Merchandise Mart or Radio City. "Do you like it any better here?" I asked him. "In some ways it's worse," he said.

I nearly fell off my chair. Such a statement from a Floridian! He saw my consternation, immediately realized my misunderstanding, and hastily proceeded to put me right.

"I see you don't mean what I mean," he said. "I thought you were asking me if I like work any better here. Frankly, I have the same allergy to useful effort that you have. But work for you up north is all you have to do. Now look out there." He pointed out the window to a gentleman in wrinkled slacks and a faded khaki shirt sitting in a boat out on the river.

Even from where we stood we could see the look of almost childish contentment on his tanned face. Just then he stood up and began reeling in his taut line.

Silver gave one look and pushed back his chair. "Listen," he said, "I can finish up what I have to do in about 15 minutes and we'll get right out there. But to answer your question: 'work is no better here than any place but the difference here is that when you quit you don't have to take a train or a plane to get where you really want to be—you're there already."

Shrimp Also Abound There

The lizard has moved over to get into a patch of sunlight leaking through the leaves of the magnolia tree.

Some shrimp boats are coming in through the inlet. This is probably the biggest shrimping port south of Savannah. I think I will go over and see if I can't get some nice fat ones. Bill Turner will clean them until they are sweet and delicate as a newly opened gladiolus. They will be boiled with just the right amount of salt. They will be chilled (not drowned in ice water until they are mushy).

My wife will do something miraculous to the sauce. How I long for that dish. Why I haven't had a real shrimp for I don't know how long—it must have been as long ago as yesterday at lunch!

Fort Pierce Has History

Fort Pierce was a real fort once—built in 1838 as one of the chain of east coast defenses against the Indians. It was a strategic point on the Indian river because a natural opening to the sea permitted easy water communication with the north. Settlers came, fought off the Indians, planted their pineapples, citrus groves, and vegetables for the winter markets. Later the artificial inlet was dredged so the big ships could dock.

Florida played more of a part in the Civil war than most textbooks record. It was the food basket of the Confederacy and also one of the great blockade running bases, and I have no doubt these cuts sheltered many a contraband cargo going to or from Cuba or the Bahamas as they did in the days of the rum runners.

The town felt the shock of World War II, literally felt it, for the submarines crept close to the coast and explosions rocked the houses far inland. Wounded survivors were brought in and cared for here as in other coast towns. Later, because land and water conditions could be simulated to resemble the terrain in the Pacific, it became the country's largest amphibious training base.

London Tobacco Shops Feature Women's Pipes

Some of the more enterprising London tobacconists have begun to feature women's pipes of attractive design with slender stems and half-sized bowls. It is admitted that not many of the new pipes have been sold, but the shopkeepers reason that if the cigarette famine continues more women will turn to pipe smoking.

That Nagging Backache
May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

What Witch Hunt?

"No Communist, no matter how many votes he should secure in a national election, could, even if he would, become President of the present government. When a Communist heads the government of the United States—and that day will come just as surely as the sun rises—the government will not be a capitalist government but a Soviet government, and behind this government will stand the Red army to enforce the dictatorship of the proletariat."

Please read the above quotation again. Could an American have said that? Or does it sound like a message from Moscow? Indeed, everything in that statement is un-American. It was written by William Z. Foster, head of the Communist Party in the United States. This statement is reprinted in large type on the back of a pamphlet prepared and distributed by a Committee of the U. S. House of Representatives. This is the Committee that is accused of "witch-hunting."

Sworn Statement

Nor is the Congress guilty of distributing the sayings of Communists as propaganda for the Soviets. The publication which carries Mr. Foster's sworn statement is very much anti-Communist. The booklet is called: "100 Things You Should Know About Communism in the U. S. A." It is one of a series of five publications "on the Communist conspiracy and its influence in this country as a whole, on religion, on education, on labor and on our government."

By giving Mr. Foster a prominent position on the back cover of this booklet, our Congress hoped to show Americans that native Communists really condemn themselves whenever they open their mouths. In the quotation, there is revealed Communism's greatest appeal: the lust for power, and the urge to dominate others that some people have. There is revealed also its greatest weakness, for people everywhere do not like to be dominated by force. People like to be free.

Light and Facts

The Congressional Committee to which I refer is the Committee on un-American Activities. If you have ever listened to the palaver of Communists or the "fellow travelers" (Communist sympathizers), the chances are you have heard this Committee of Congress strongly criticized. Like the committee says, the right answers given in the booklet, by using the facts, must certainly infuriate the Communists. It is true also that many of these right answers will shock the average citizen who has not studied the "ism" closely.

It is not my purpose to apologize for the Committee on un-American Activities. No apologies are needed. It has done a great service to the American people in a time when light and facts are needed to clear up so much confusion. If the Committee has made minor mistakes in the course of its work, it has at the same time done a glorious job in reselling our people on the American way of life. It has opened the dark secrets of Communist conspirators.

Hired Men

The Communist policy is to break down existing nations any way they can, and in the confusion to seize control. They will promise every kind of "better life," but they have never been known to deliver it. As an American I am thankful for the work the Committee has done. I say with the Committee: "You know what the United States is like today. If you want it exactly the opposite, you should turn Communist. But before you do, remember you will lose your independence, your property, and your freedom of mind."

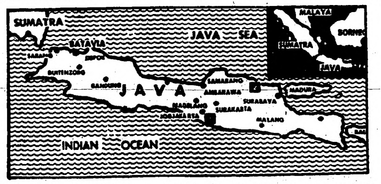
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Dutch Forces Overrun Indonesia; Peace Feeler Offered China Reds; U. S. Stand Settled If War Comes

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



WAR IN INDONESIA . . . Describing the offensive as "police action" against Indonesian terrorists, the Dutch government managed to invade the Indonesian republic by land, sea and air in time to enable Dutch troops to spend Christmas on Java. The capital city, Jogjakarta (1), was captured in the first hours of fighting, and the Netherlands forces moved easily through Indonesia in an almost bloodless occupation.

DUTCH PUSH:
Into Indonesia

The young Indonesian republic was fallen on evil days. Dutch troops raced through Java and Sumatra in a bloodless occupation, threatening the remaining important centers of the republic.

DUTCH MARINES had forged to the outskirts of the Republican army's only oil center on Java. Other Netherlands forces, in a lightning thrust through western Sumatra, were within 40 miles of the chief Republican city on that island.

Decrying charges of war and invasion, the Dutch termed their activities "police action." Well ahead of their time-table, the Dutch had effected advances with practically no bloodshed.

International diplomats turned eyes toward Washington where the United States had been formally asked to grant "political and economic" support to the tiny republic. The Indonesian minister had further asked serious consideration of U. S. cutting off of Marshall-plan aid to the Netherlands because of the Dutch action in the East Indies.

The Dutch announcement on the outbreak of hostilities said:

"FOLLOWING a breakdown of informal talks with the republic after its failure to comply with its truce obligations or to reply to the last Dutch note asking for a binding declaration on four essential points, the Netherlands government reluctantly finds itself obliged to take military action against terrorist activities and undisciplined elements in the republic who render any constructive policy impossible."

The Indonesians had some support. An American member of the United Nations good offices committee charged the Dutch had violated the Indonesian truce agreement signed last January after the first abortive war in Java had ended.

U. S. DECISION:
All Settled

If it comes to war with Russia, where will the United States stand?

Diplomatic informants had no doubt as to the answer. Their opinion was firm and immediate: The United States is prepared, even in advance of a formal military alliance, to coordinate its military forces in Europe with those of the western European powers in the event of open conflict with Russia.

IF SHOOTING ever starts, these officials said, American forces would come under the general operational control of the western European commander, Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery, of Britain. Montgomery is chairman of the military staff committee of the western European union.

But these sources added that there is no reason now more than there ever has been to consider that war with Russia is close at hand or unavoidable. In fact, it was said top officials have great hope that the building up of real power in the western world by devices such as the military arrangement for western Europe will discourage the Russians from committing any overt act.

THE COUNTRIES in the western European union, Britain, Belgium, France, the Netherlands and Luxembourg are negotiating now with the United States on more permanent military arrangements. Their embassies are working with U. S. state department officials to draft a north Atlantic region security alliance by which the United States would be committed to help any member nations if any of them were attacked.

POLL-TOPPER:
Mr. Truman

If there is anything to the adage about he who laughs last laughs best, Harry S. Truman should be chuckling fit to kill himself.

He not only pole-axed the pollsters with his election victory but, snatching a hair from the dog that bit them, he turned up as the "most admired man" in the world, as far as Americans are concerned. And he did it in a poll—Dr. George Gallup's poll, in fact.

PEACE FEELER:
To China Reds

Time really was running out for the Nationalist government of China's Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Sun Fo, son of Dr. Sun Yat-sen, revered "father of the Chinese republic," was at the helm as premier and had put together a new cabinet. "We have to fight on," he told the cabinet, "until we can secure an honorable peace" with the Communists.

THUS WAS the cat out of the bag. Indications were plain that if nothing could be worked out with Chiang in the saddle, he might be unhorsed and peace brought to troubled China by other hands.

Sun's statement, which could be viewed as a peace feeler toward the Reds, came as the Communists tightened their squeeze on the big northern city of Tientsin.

After his comment about an "honorable peace," Sun added:

"I CAN ASSURE you that we will not surrender outright . . ." Such a surrender, he said, would mean "scuttling" the anti-Communist front and "China would become a second Poland or Czechoslovakia—which I am trying to prevent."

Failure of any enthusiastic reception to Madame Chiang's "help, please" visit to Washington and of the nationalist armies to stem the Communist hordes combined to dim any hope for survival of the present nationalist regime.

GOOD NEWS:
About Food

Out of the welter of news of bad things that might happen, came good news of food—among them report of prospects of lower prices during 1949.

FOR INSTANCE, various food authorities predicted that increased food supplies would reduce to some extent the cost of setting the nation's tables in the coming 12 months. Comments to this effect were forthcoming from the annual food-industry-review issue of the National Grocers' bulletin, a publication of the National Association of Retail Grocers.

Too, various indexes of wholesale prices showed the food-price level declining.

In the grocers' bulletin, Agriculture Secretary Brannan said:

"The United States has entered the door of the year of plenty."

FOOD RETAILERS added rosy tints to the picture with the observation that prices, besides declining slightly, would be more stable in 1949 than they have been in the postwar years.

Breadwinners and householders greeted the news warmly. Both could stand a lot of price slashing as an ease in such other aggravating problems as automobile and housing shortages, dwindling dollar value in other fields, drafting of the nation's youth and threats to peace aboard.

DOPE:
Fewer Addicts

Federal narcotic agents could take a breather—there were fewer dope addicts in the United States.

Three experts, writing in the Journal of the American Medical Association, declared there are only 48,000 narcotic addicts in the nation now, and most of them are men. These experts declared that the number of drug users has dwindled from between 150,000 to 200,000 in 1914 to about 48,000 at the last count.

Drug addiction is a symptom of a basic underlying personality maladjustment, according to the experts, and victims fall into five general classes. These are, in the order of their numerical importance:

THOSE WHO become accidentally addicted while taking drugs for illness; those who take drugs to relieve psychoneurotic symptoms; psycopathic persons who learn through association with other addicts; persons with real mental illness who feel better while taking drugs, and a minor group with "behavior or character" disorders

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE
by Roger C. Whitman

QUESTION: Is it advisable to wash the house before painting? If so, what is the best cleaning agent to use?

ANSWER: Professional painters do not wet surfaces shortly before painting. They use wire brushes, steel wool, turpentine, and sometimes a blow-torch to take off old paint. Steel wool and turpentine usually serve to clean the surface sufficiently for paint to adhere. Paint remover can be used if necessary to remove old paint. Follow by thorough cleaning with turpentine. Brushing off the dust is usually sufficient.

QUESTION: We are about to move into a house that has wood clapboard siding. It has no spouting. Would you advise copper spouting, or will it stain the walls?

ANSWER: On paint containing zinc there may be some discoloration from copper. On straight lead paint the discoloration will wash away. Copper has the great advantage of being non-rusting, and for this reason is very economical. To prevent discoloration you could apply spar varnish on the spouting, renewing it from time to time whenever necessary, or you could paint it.

QUESTION: Our window frames are made of soft pine and are finished in enamel. Condensation causes water to run down the panes and soften the enamel, which peels off in flakes. It is only the lower part of the frame that peels; the other parts are in good condition. How can the frame be waterproofed?

ANSWER: Your windows may need to be re-puttied. Before winter you should plan to have storm sash put on the windows to prevent the condensation. In the meantime, scrape off the failing paint, wipe the wood with turpentine and refinish with two coats enamel undercoater and a coat of enamel.

Since Central America has no proved coal or oil deposits, wood (or charcoal) was once the only fuel of home and industry alike. Later, some hydroelectric power was developed, particularly in Costa Rica. Imported kerosene, however, long ago became the indispensable household fuel.

Presidential Inaugurations Are Mostly Circumstantial

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—"The King is dead, long live the King."

Thus the ancient rite proclaimed a new sovereign who "by the grace of God" must take up the scepter. At once a hundred pairs of hands are busy preparing for the coronation. Courtiers and commoners, the noble masters and mistresses of ceremony, seamstresses and workmen, knights and stable boys, each trained to his task begin their work for the great event.

Form and program may differ, but where kings and emperors reign, the ceremony, according to the stern law of tradition, seldom varies in any but the smallest degree.

BAUKHAGE

Only a cataclysm can effect a change. I heard about my first coronation when I was 12 years old. I remember it for two reasons, one being the fact that it almost didn't come off. On the very eve of the ceremonial day, the heir to the throne fell ill. All celebration was called off. And then on the day after the event was to have taken place, as the nation waited anxiously to hear the fate of its sovereign-to-be, a shocking and ludicrous thing occurred.

One of the country's leading newspapers came out with a report of the coronation, mentioning even minor details just as if it occurred (and just as it did occur later).

This journalistic faux-pas was forgotten by most people outside of the profession, but I was to be reminded of it when I went to work on a rival newspaper in London many years later and heard the tale retold as a grim warning to pressmen and journalists.

The editor of the erring journal didn't think he was taking much of a chance. He knew the coronation program never varied from the reign of one sovereign to another. Up until that time, I suppose, no English king had ever been rash enough to become ill and change the program.

As a matter of fact, I didn't take the warning seriously. Later I was able to insert much color in my report of the wedding of a royal German princess by the simple expedient of translating a story of the nuptial ceremonies of her brother which had appeared in a Berlin newspaper some years before.

But no one could attempt to write up the inauguration of an American President from the account of a previous ceremony. A mere two centuries is short enough in a nation's history, to be sure, but many changes have taken place in our habits and customs since George Washington took over the presidential oath of office.

It is said that George Washington never considered himself America's first President, never referred to himself or was referred to by his contemporaries as such, since others served before him under the first constitution. The United States was already a nation, recognized as such by the presence of foreign ambassadors on April 30, 1789, the day Washington took the oath of office.

The position of the previous "presidents" was largely honorary and not filled by popular vote, and when the day came to invest Washington with the new powers, there was no precedent, no set of rules to follow.

New York was the capital, and General Washington set out from Mount Vernon to New York on the long journey which turned out to be a spontaneous tour of triumph with a reception at every city along the way.

There was no dearth of ideas as to the social program. A flower-bedecked barge, accompanied by a whole flotilla of private craft, carried the President-Elect across the Hudson, and he was wined and dined and welcomed with gaily-bedizened guards of honor surrounding him.

But when it came to the actual ceremony, a deadlock occurred. The senate argued for an hour as to whether it should receive the new chief executive seated or whether the members should rise. Indeed, they might be talking still if the house of representatives had not suddenly appeared. Washington then entered the building with due pomp and finally was led to an outdoor balcony where the crowds of Broad street witnessed his oath.

That part of the ceremony—the taking of the oath out of doors—is now an established precedent, although it was either forgotten or ignored until James Monroe's day. The chamber of the senate or the house where it took place until Monroe's time was, however, usually open to as many of the public as could find room.

Circumstance has contributed to variations in the program. Besides the moving of the capital in the early days, there have been the cases of death in office. Five times a President has taken the oath without the usual ceremony for this reason. President William Henry Harrison came into office as a hardy military hero, and, scorning a carriage, rode bare-headed to the Capitol on horseback. A month later he died. Vice-President John Tyler was in Williamsburg and did not reach Washington until two days after the appointed date. Tyler took the oath on April 6, 1841, in Brown's hotel in the presence of members of the cabinet.

The next emergency installation took place when Andrew Johnson took the oath in the Kirkwood hotel a few hours after Abraham Lincoln had died from an assassin's bullet. The first time that a President was sworn in away from Washington since it had become the nation's capital was when Vice-President Chester Arthur took the oath in his own home in New York City shortly after the news came of President James Garfield's death at Long Beach.

When President William McKinley was shot at the Pan-American exposition, Vice-President Theodore Roosevelt hurried to Buffalo in time to take the oath in the home of Ansley Wilcox on the same day the President expired. And most of us are familiar with the scene in the little Northampton home where by lamplight a father, as the witnessing notary, took the oath of his son, and Calvin Coolidge succeeded Warren Harding who had passed away a few hours before in a San Francisco hotel.

When Franklin Roosevelt died at Warm Springs in 1945, Harry Truman took the oath in the White House executive wing. This was "public" in the sense that the door to the little office was open, and photographers and newsmen, this one among them, looked over each other's heads from the crowded corridors.

Some Variations Took Place

Another circumstance has affected the procedure of the accession to office. Because of the variability of the calendar, March fourth has four times fallen on Sunday. Until Woodrow Wilson took the oath on Sunday, March 4, 1917, in the President's room in the Capitol, no President had ventured to keep the law and violate the Sabbath.

President Monroe on succeeding himself had announced simply that he would take the oath on Monday, March 5. In 1849, the same thing occurred in the case of President Zachary Taylor. But for some reason, President Rutherford Hayes actually became President before his time. He was secretly sworn in on Saturday, the third, the ceremony being repeated on the fifth in public.

For some years it has been considered necessary for an outgoing President, if there is one, to take part in the ceremony. His presence has been as much expected in the carriage or automobile which carries both men to the Capitol as the President-Elect. This was not always so, and both the Adamses made it a point to absent themselves, the former leaving the city before the ceremony, and the other taking a horseback ride at the moment when the guns boomed out the salute to his bitterly-hated opponent.

Perhaps the inaugural day first began to take on its present complexion with the advent of President James Madison. People thronged into the capital and the first inaugural ball was held. President Monroe, who followed him, gave us another precedent—the presence of the marine band. But it was left to Martin Van Buren to bear a unique honor. He was the first American-born citizen to hold that office. Up until his time the Presidents were all former British subjects.

Because of the war and a desire to emphasize the "fourth-term" as little as possible, the 1945 inauguration ceremonies of Franklin D. Roosevelt took place on the White House portico instead of on a platform on the east front of the Capitol building which is now accepted as the usual location.

No outgoing President will ride with Harry Truman this year, but one ex-President may attend the ceremonies. The warm feeling which exists between the former small-town boy from Missouri and the wealthy retired engineer will undoubtedly assure Herbert Hoover a place of honor if he wishes to accept it.

Two little girls were being taken away from London, and as a special treat someone had given them a couple of bananas — the first they had ever had.

As soon as one child had taken a bite of her banana the unlighted train ran into a tunnel.

"No," replied Mary.

"Well, don't," added Jane. "They make you blind."

"Were you ever disappointed in love?"

"Yes, twice. The first jilted me, and the second didn't."

Conservation Methods Keep Soil at Home For High Crop Yields in Years Ahead

Erosion Takes Command and Soils Wash Away on Poorly Managed Land.

CHICAGO—Building the soil and letting it wash away is like putting money in the bank and then burning the bank down, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement made public here.

"Soil building needs top priority on most Midwestern farms," the statement points out. "But there is not much point in building the soil unless you keep it at home to give high crop yields.

"That is why it is so important to use the teamwork of practices that build and maintain soil structure and measures that prevent erosion and keep your soils home.

"A good crop rotation is the foundation of your soil building program. Well-fed, deep-rooted legumes and grasses are the corner stone. Liming, based on soil tests, is one of the supporting pillars. Another is a balanced supply of plant nutrients for the soil, including phosphate and potash.

"Deep-rooted legumes are No. 1 soil builders. They add to the organic matter supply. They improve soil structure. Such soil has what we call good tilth.

"Legumes and grasses can do a good soil building job only if they are well fed.

"But building soil structure is not the whole story. On some farms you can cut down erosion merely by putting the soil in shape so that less water runs off and steals your top soil. In other soils, you may need contour cultivation, strip cropping, terracing and other conservation measures."

Crown Fruit Salad Is 'Fit for a King'

"Fit for a king" is what homemakers say about crown shaped fruit salad, according to the Country Cooking editor of Capper's Farmer, nationally-circulated farm magazine.

"Studded with jewel - colored pieces of fruit, it makes a lovely picture on your prettiest glass plate," she writes in the magazine read by 1,250,000 farm families. "Cool and tartly sweet it offers flavor contrast to the meat-and-potato part of a meal. It's a delightful afternoon snack with a cup of hot coffee."

Crown Fruit Salad

1 tbsp. unflavored gelatin
2 tbsp. cold water
1 c. fruit juice (peach, cherry, orange or pineapple)
Lettuce
½ c. light cream
⅓ c. mayonnaise
2 canned peaches or pears, sliced
1 orange, sliced
½ c. maraschino cherries

Soak gelatin in cold water. Heat fruit juice or juices to boiling; remove from heat and dissolve gelatin in hot juice. Cool. Add the light cream and mayonnaise and stir until mixture is smooth. Cool until mixture is slightly thickened; then add sliced fruit and halved cherries. Pour into a mold rinsed in cold water. Chill until firm. Unmold on glass plate or platter. Arrange lettuce leaves around the edge of the salad. Garnish with clusters of grapes, halves of bananas or slices of canned fruit. Serves six. This molded fruit salad is lovely to serve at a buffet supper.

LOOKING AHEAD
BY GEORGE S. BENSON
President—Harding College Searcy, Arkansas

An American Tragedy

Now and then, a sorry scene is staged in the drama of American life. I refer to the tragic denial of basic American principles by misled persons and groups, acting in the name of religion. It grates on my ears when I hear of it. Though some of these persons are sincere, doubtless, I get plenty riled when I read the news that some church group decided that those principles which have so long brought us prosperity and well-being, must be replaced as behind-the-times.

Here are free Americans, citizens of a land that grants them freedom of religion, assembly, speech—citizens whose founding fathers dedicated this nation to truth. They know that in America, the most liberty is found in doing right deeds. Yet—these who receive so many blessings—yet will they deny the heritage which should be theirs to pass on to their children.

Better Society?

In New England last June, a group of ministers met and in unanimous agreement called for "change toward the better society." So far, so good. But then, this group denounced the idea of profit incentives! "Monopolistic capitalism," they said. What blindness! In this frame of mind, would it not be easy for them to embrace Communism?

This same group called for the creation of "community without loss of individual freedom." What contradictions! What impossibilities! Do you know what community is? It is not individual freedom, not the right to your own decisions, not the exercise of self reliance. That shadowy wording means: state control of everything. "Community" is common ownership; it is Communism. This is amazing, for a religious group to call for a state dictatorship system — for Communism itself.

Economic Nonsense

Out in California last year a very large and influential group of churchmen accepted a conference report which lashed out against "the un-Christian motivation of industry by the lust for profit." In simpler terms, this means you are under suspicion if you have ideas about either having or making money. One religious leader present said it was not profit itself, but just the desire for profit, that was opposed. What nonsense for educated men!

To say things like that is to condemn industry in whole and in part. Labor, right along with management, is socked right between the eyes. This kind of thinking denies the basis of America's strength. It would repeal the principles which have made our land the finest ever, anywhere at any time. It calls for the overthrow of the American system. That is exactly what will have to take place if the profit-motive is ever discarded.

Keep Our Freedoms

I cannot help wondering why these churchmen say these things. Is it because they have not read the Parable of the Talents (Matthew 25)? Can they not see they are following right in line with those who long to destroy America? Do they want a Godless nation, like Russia? Are they the unassigned agents of systems foreign to America? I have not the answer. But I do place confidence in the religious people of America. All together, we must preserve this nation.

Typha Plant to begin Work

O. T. Ness and son have been busy this week getting ready for reopening the Typha Plant. Operations will begin next week when they will begin processing and baling the Typha.

A new building has been erected on the lots where the building was located that burned to the ground last November. The new plant is practically fireproof.

Mr. Ness has an order for 100,000 pounds of Typha to be shipped to Miami, Oklahoma, where it is used in manufacturing life preservers, toys, cushions and other articles. This will be processed to remove the stems and seeds of the cattails, treated with DDT as an added precaution against infestation of insects in hot climates, baled in 27 inch by 14 inch bales and shipped in carload lots. The present order will be about five carloads. They also have orders for several small lots from other concerns.

The demand for our northern picked cattail fluff is increasing due to the fact that the quality is better. The freezing of the heads is advantageous in the picking and drying out of the cattails.

Handy Bottle of Vinegar

Many homemakers like the idea of keeping a bottle of vinegar on hand with several cloves of garlic and a few pods of red peppers in it. Such vinegar is particularly pleasing in flavor when used in making mayonnaise or french dressing for vegetable salads, and is delicious too when poured over a roast of lamb or beef.

Washington Monument

Cornerstone of the Washington monument was laid on July 4, 1848. The famous obelisk rests on a stone 20 feet or more underground at the base of the monument's original foundations. The stone was taken from a Baltimore quarry. The shaft is 555 feet high.

New Insecticide Reported Safe

New and effective insecticide that combines high insecticidal efficiency, low toxicity to warm-blooded animals and safety to plants has recently been developed. Toxicological tests show that bis-trichloroethane, the active ingredient, is one of the safest to animals of all the new insecticides. It has a fast knock-down or paralytic action against flies and mosquitoes, according to national patent council.

The Hawk Family

That most hawks are beneficial, feeding mostly on rodents and insects, has been substantiated by examination of thousands of hawk stomachs. There are three main groups of hawks: the Buteos, Falcons and Accipeters. Hawks in the Buteo group (broad wings and fan-like tails) are commonly called chicken hawks or hen hawks, and have suffered most at the hands of gunners who think they destroy poultry and game birds.

J. Q. Adams on Astronomy

At the age of 77, John Quincy Adams journeyed from his home in Massachussetts to Cincinnati to lay the cornerstone of the Astronomical Observatory. It was a long and fatiguing trip by stagecoach, by canal boat, by steamboat and part of the way by the newly invented railroad train. Much of Adams' dedicatory address concerned the neglect of astronomy in the United States.

A disease of pecans is known as the "bunch disease", or witch's broom. To combat this disease, pecan growers should cut out all diseased portions of trees infected with it. If a limb has this disease on the end, it should be cut back at the base and the diseased portion destroyed by burning. This is a virus diseaes and cannot be controlled by spraying.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Asserts Red Aims Split As Some Leaders Desire Accord; Dutch Firm on Indonesian Stand

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR:
Someone Tiring

If Harry S. Truman were right, then possibility of war with Russia was less than many Americans imagined. In a "surprise" statement during an unheralded appearance at a luncheon in Kansas City, President Truman declared bluntly that "certain leaders" in Russia "are exceedingly anxious to reach an agreement with the United States to end the cold war."

THEN THE PRESIDENT lashed out with an accusation that the Soviets have violated "sacred" agreements and said their government "has a system of morals that are not moral."

Deliberately or not, President Truman was baring some closeted secrets when he said during that speech that the Russians had not kept important agreements made at Yalta and Potsdam. By that statement, the President was conceding charges of long duration that certain commitments were made at these two parleys with the Russians which were not generally known, and results of which led to accusations that American diplomacy had failed miserably in negotiations with Russia's Josef Stalin.

The President's position was far from an earlier expansive statement that Stalin was a "nice old fellow."

He did not identify the Red leaders who prefer an "understanding" —as he put it—with the United States, but he asserted that there are Soviet top men who have no desire for war. Neither did the President say whether any overtures had been made by such Russian leaders.

The President said frankly: "I made certain specific agreements at Potsdam, none of which have been kept. Certain agreements were made at Yalta, none of which have been kept."

He reiterated that "all the United States wants is peace."

INDONESIA:
Dutch Stubborn

Stubbornness is a characteristic trait of the Dutch—and Holland was running true to form. Despite announcement by the United States, from which she is receiving Marshall plan aid, that the invasion of Indonesia must stop, the Dutch said, in effect, they'd think the order over.

THE UNITED NATIONS was concerned, but a Russian step to the fore in demanding a cease-fire order and troop withdrawal in 24 hours did the Indonesians no good. This time, the U. S. abstained from voting and the Russian proposal lost.

However, the American position was difficult of understanding, and the statement of American delegate Philip Jessup did little to clarify it.

"I decline to be put in a false position by other delegations," he said. "The record of the United States on Indonesia is before the world."

BUT ALSO BEFORE the world was the issue of American prestige and the integrity of the Marshall plan. America stood for help for Indonesia; America controlled the powerful weapon of economic aid to the Dutch. Yet, America, as yet, had delivered no ultimatum to the nation whose foray into Indonesia was being helped by American dollars. And the American delegate had declined to vote for a cease-fire order in the Indonesian fighting — joining Great Britain in the vote declination.

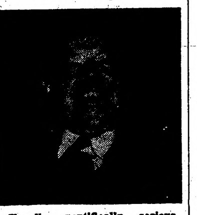
Whatever else was true, and regardless of motives, the assertion of the Soviet Ukranian delegate appeared to be true. He charged: "Without United States financial help, the Netherlands would have been unable to wage war in Indonesia."

Operation 'Tactful'

Sociology was looking up. The Australian Legion of Ex-Servicemen and Women had taken up the task of helping young veterans and their wives with "in-law" troubles. They started a scheme to enable veterans forced by housing shortages to live with parents-in-law to exchange homes with others.

Spokesmen for the legion said many English marriages had been saved from disaster by a similar scheme operating in Britain. They found couples could live happier with strangers where they were paying guests.

Taft Laughed



Usually pontifically serious, Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio was in an expansive mood as he chatted with newsmen on his return to Washington following a tour of Europe. He praised the operation of the economic cooperation administration (Marshall plan).

FOR CHINA:
Watch and Wait

U. S. policy on China, for the time being at least, appeared to be one of watching and waiting, coupled with a resounding diplomatic silence.

America had two good considerations upon which to base that policy:

1. THE UNITED STATES stood convinced that nothing other than direct intervention in the military situation in China would change the course of events, and that the government is not prepared to intervene to that extent.

2. There is, in the United States, an inaccurate assumption that American economic aid is a foolproof solution to the difficulties of other countries; that this aid, if put into a given country as raw materials are put into a machine, would suddenly be processed into an effective, finished product. Life was not precisely like that—especially in China.

To all of which might be added these two additional factors:

1. The United States was caught in this dilemma: If it issues a statement supporting the Nationalists, as Mme. Chiang Kai-shek urged, it might merely associate itself with the collapse of the present Chinese regime without preventing that collapse.

2. On the other hand, if it explains why it is not granting further aid to Chiang, and publishes what has happened to previous aid, it might hasten Chiang's collapse.

Hence, the attitude of watchful waiting.

MARSHALL:
How Long?

The question of who would be President Truman's secretary of state was concerning official Washington and the diplomatic centers of the world.

Ailing Gen. George C. Marshall was ordered to rest, observe strict dietary instructions. Evidence was largely at hand that the President was reluctant to trust the touchy problems of international policy in less experienced hands, yet the chief problem persisted: Could Marshall carry on effectively despite his serious ailment—loss of a kidney through operation?

THE PRESIDENT appeared committed to a policy of letting Marshall stay on, or, rather, keeping Marshall on the job despite any desire of the latter to give up his post.

A close associate of the President was quoted as saying the chief executive was willing to wait until Marshall recovered sufficiently to do a full-time job, even if that should require months. Robert A. Lovett, said not to "gee" as well with the President as Marshall did, would continue to act for Marshall while the latter rested.

SOME OF THE President's friends declared that if he should finally decide that Marshall can't carry the load, he probably would like to have Chief Justice Fred Vinson take over.

To do so would mean a great personal sacrifice for the Kentuckian, for his position on the court is permanent, while an administration change might leave him out in the cold—and Vinson is no young man, either.

Army Checking Newcomers for Red Taint

The army is looking closely to the political integrity of its inductees and applicants for commissions. Army spokesmen have released an announcement that existing regulations now require all inductees and applicants for commissions to certify whether they have been members of subversive organizations. If they had been such members they are barred from service.

The affidavit requires enlistees or officer applicants to state whether they have membership in any organization advocating overthrow of the government.

Draftees also are required to sign such affidavits when they appear for induction.

'Star-Spangled Banner' Once Just Another Tune

Bet you never heard this little-known fact before. "The Star-Spangled Banner" was once just another patriotic tune known as "The Defense of Fort McHenry."

The words were written in 1814 by Francis Scott Key, a lawyer of Maryland, who witnessed the British bombardment of nearby Fort McHenry during the War of 1812.

The lyric at once gained popularity as a national air. "The Star-Spangled Banner," however, was not officially named and designated as the national anthem until congress so legislated March 3, 1931.

To save frosting a butter cake, sprinkle the batter with finely chopped filberts before baking; do not use on sponge type cakes since the batter is not heavy enough to hold the nuts and they will sink to the bottom.

You can improvise shoulder covers to hang over dresses, in the closet with old pillow cases. Just make a slit in the closed end and slip over the hanger.

Fringe used as trimming should never be ironed. Instead comb it carefully while it's still wet.

Teach Child to Be Kind To Doting Grandmother

If your children visit grandmother often, they should be taught not to annoy their kindly relative. It's a good idea, too, to send books and toys to grandmother's house along with the children.

To line cake pans easily with wax paper, grease pan lightly, cover with a piece of waxed paper and insert another pan identical or nearly so. Trim off the edges.

WASHINGTON.—The dim roar of an approaching battle in congress is being heard over the horizon. The struggle will concern S-1320, the national health insurance and public health bill.

This measure was opposed in the last session by an organization formed by the American Medical association which turned out to be, in terms of dollars spent, the biggest lobby in Washington, and that is a record.

BAUKHAGE

Why does the medical association oppose the bill? Supporters of the legislation say because the majority of the doctors, like the majority of the people in the country don't understand it.

Many doctors think it would foul up their practice of medicine with politics. Many also say it would destroy normal patient-physician relations because the patient would have to take what medical treatment he could get on an assembly-line basis. This latter assumption is based on a misapprehension of what is actually in the bill which I'll mention later.

The former charge is a prediction and can't be answered categorically. I can understand it. When I was in college, I got a summer job on the Chautauqua daily. Chautauqua is a pretty big summer community, and health is important. A young medical student friend of mine whose father had a pull got the job of inspecting cowbarns of farmers supplying milk to Chautauqua. I made the rounds with him once. He examined the bovine living conditions thoroughly and some were pretty vile. He made notes and put them in a report recommending that purchases from a particular farmer be suspended until the barns were cleaned up.

What happened? He got a sharp call-down from his superior. After that, inspection consisted in opening cow-barn doors, holding the nose, and looking the other way.

That happened many years ago, and I have heard that Chautauqua county is noted for its model dairies. But there is always a lurking suspicion that when a politician puts his finger in the pie it turns sour.

The only specific answer to this charge of politics that I have discovered is one offered in a pamphlet gotten out by the Federation of Women's Clubs which says: "the plan allows for the representation of the people paying for it."

Perhaps a better answer lies in the fact that the American Federation of Labor and the CIO, both of whose leaders know just about as much about how politically-controlled institutions operate as any organization heads in the country, favor the bill. It has been supported by many individual doctors and by the Physicians Forum, and the Committee of Physicians for the Improvement of Medical Care.

But what is "it," this national health insurance bill? Are you familiar with its purpose, what it proposes to do and how it proposes to do it?

Let's go back. What was the most shocking revelation in the World War II draft statistics? I'd be willing to bet the thing that most painfully surprised the whole country was that one-third of our youth of military age was unhealthy.

Out of fifteen million registrants, five million were rejected for physical or mental disabilities. Rural residents as a group were even less healthy. Forty-one out of each 100 rural registrants were turned down as 4-Fs. It had been just the opposite in World War I when farmers outdistanced city folk in good health.

From these figures, we suddenly discovered that the American youth wasn't such a hale and hearty individual as we had thought. Later, as you may not know, we learned that 325,000 Americans die every year who could be saved with proper medical care.

About twenty per cent of our people can afford all the medical care they need.

Half our families—those with an income of $3,000 a year or less—find it hard, if not impossible—to pay for even routine medical care.

Thirty per cent of our families in the $3,000 to $5,000-a-year bracket would have to go into debt or make other sacrifices to meet the cost of severe or chronic illness.

So you can see why America is twenty-three per cent unhealthy.

From the beginning Americans have believed that sound minds are the responsibility of the state, hence the public school system. A sound mind isn't much good in an unsound body. So, say the supporters of the national health insurance bill, it is logical and thoroughly in keeping with American principles to tax everybody so that everybody can get medical care. They argue that freedom from persecution by germs is as much the business of the whole people as freedom from persecution, censorship, or any of the other restrictions our ancestors came to America to avoid.

I won't go into the history of the bill. It was written after years of study, six years of public hearings before congressional committees.

Those who have opposed the measure have made their chief argument a contention that it would be another step toward a socialized state, that it would indeed socialize the medical profession. On point one, the supporters say truthfully "that argument was once raised against the public schools, city water-works, municipal sewage systems, electric light and power plants, which are now accepted as a matter of course."

Under the national health insurance bill, the federal government would collect the money and manage it along with the social security fund which it does now, disburse it to the states for the services rendered by the doctors and approve of the various state set-ups.

The actual arrangements for the services of the doctors who would go right on with their private practices as well if they wanted to, would be made between doctor and patient. The patient, unless his family doctor refused to join up, would have his services just the same, only they would be free. The doctor wouldn't have to accept any patient he didn't want.

Part of the money would go to the states for research, medical education and various preventive services. How much would it cost? One and one-half per cent of your earnings up to $3,600 which your employer would match. If you are self-employed, you would pay three per cent up to $3,600 of your own earnings. And that, say the bill's proponents is no more than you pay now (on the average) to a voluntary group health agency if you belong to one and it's less than you would pay to a private physician.

Physicians' rates and mode of payment will be established by the vote of the majority of the physicians in the given area or locality.

Since the worst shortage of doctors is in rural areas, it is expected that with assurance of adequate pay through the national insurance fund, more physicians will be attracted to those areas. Also the fund will help to expand local public health services, rural hospital and ambulance service.

Aside from the poorer health in farm communities, maternal mortality is higher and, as every farmer knows, accidents are high. There are 54 deaths per 100,000 population on farms, only 20 per 100,000 in industry.

In the controversy over this measure both sides point to the experience of other countries. They claim the national insurance system was inaugurated in Germany in 1883. One Americal Medical association member says medical care declined under it. He probably knows more about it than I, but the statement was certainly a surprise.

Similar complaints have been made against a similar plan which has just been inaugurated in Britain. But a recent poll taken in England says 91 per cent of the physicians have joined up which would seem to show they approved of the way it works even if they opposed it in the beginning. And the people voted it the most popular measure passed by the present government. The British Medical association did not oppose the bill as a whole but fought against certain portions, particularly those which they thought might make them "servants of the state."

These facts I have checked as nearly as I can and do not believe they will be disputed. As to the opinions, they remain as such. And you can't look into the future. From what I can learn, the supporters of the bill believe that it will be one of the first introduced in the new congress, that it will reach the floor by February and that the chances for its passage are good.

Deep-Rooted Legumes Open Tight Soils For Higher Yields

CHICAGO—Pointing out that "no crop can do a better producing job than the roots that nourish it," the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee advised farmers to "recharge" the rundown organic matter supply of their land as the best means of improving tilth and opening up tightly-packed soil to rain water and oxygen.

"Organic matter enables the soil to soak up and store rain water," the statement points out, "Plant roots get their oxygen chiefly from this rain water. Without oxygen they cannot perform their task of carrying nutrients to the plant growth above the ground."

The committee quotes a recent statement by Dr. George N. Hoffer of Lafayette, Indiana, recommending deep-rooted legumes as the best remedy for tightly packed clay soils, whose organic matter supply has been "mined" out.

"Sweet clover and alfalfa have long been regarded as nitrogen-accumulating crops," Dr. Hoffer declared. "But they are even more valuable in improving soil tilth.

"These legumes when well fertilized with phosphorus and potash, push their tap-roots straight down into the soil and put all-important organic matter deep where it should be. When the tap-roots die the soil is opened up so that oxygen can more readily reach the roots of other crops in the rotation. Best of all, the tap roots destroy the compactions that often develop in soils below the plow furrows."

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Next time you go through Fergus Falls, stop and look at the little dam in the Otter Tail River behind our home office. At the turn of the century an old water wheel at that same spot — used for furnishing power to a woolen mill, a machine shop and other early industries — gave Vernon A. Wright the inspiration for supplying folks with electricity.

Consequently, in April, 1909, the infant Otter Tail Power Company opened its first "electricity factory" at Dayton Hollow, an old land-mark south of Fergus, on the Otter Tail River. (In fact, my grandfather, Eager-Beaver Kilowatt, was at the opening.) What started as a small family business is now a large "family" business, with many Otter Tail subscribers owning shares in the company that supplies them with electricity. Nearly 500 communities and 80,000 individuals in this territory now enjoy the benefits of electricity— all because a man looking at a dam had an idea.

Incidentally, whenever you are in Fergus Falls or in any town where there is a plant or office, stop in and see the Otter Tail folks. They're right in the middle of a $26,254,000 four-year construction program to give MORE electricity to MORE people — and they'll want to tell you about it.

Alvin G. Ball

The other day Mr. Cy Wright, son of the man who got the idea from the dam, called me into his office and said: "Reddy, why don't you hop on one of our high-lines and go up to Sarles, North Dakota, and see Mr. Alvin G. Ball."

Well, folks, I didn't know who Alvin G. Ball was, but I found out soon as I got to Sarles. Al owns the ONLY electrically heated home in North Dakota — in fact, it may very well be the northernmost house in the entire world that is electrically heated.

Al's house is a cozy place — six rooms and bath with an electric heating unit in each room. Each unit has its own thermostat for individual room temperatures. Al figures that electric heat costs him 20% to 30% more than oil heat, but he says the simple installation cost him 50% to 75% less than an oil furnace. "What I like about it," says Al, "is the fact that it's entirely trouble-free, requires no attention, and is so much cleaner."

Electrically heated home at Sarles, N. D.

I'd have a tough job if I had to heat EVERY home electrically right now — but the Otter Tail folks are continually providing me with more help to take care of the ever increasing demand for my service.

See you folks next month, same place, same time. Meanwhile if there are any questions you want answered about electric service, or if you have any items of interest for this little column, write to me: Reddy Kilowatt, % Otter Tail Power Co., Fergus Falls, Minn.

Prompt Action Vital When Child Is Hurt Nurse Tells Mothers

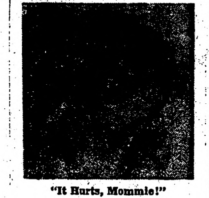
WHEN accidents happen and you hear the cry "It hurts, Mommie!", don't let your child down. Don't break his faith in you. Learn what to do before the doctor comes.

That's the advice to mothers given by Beulah France, R. N., in Capper's Farmer, a magazine read by 1,250,000 farm families.

"Upon your actions may depend the seriousness of consequences," she writes. "The first 24 hours are often the most vital.

"If a fall leaves a child unconscious or conscious but disinterested and 'stupid' keep him flat on his back, covered warmly, with head lower than feet. He is probably in a state of shock.

"Broken bones may be indicated by pain and inability to move them.



"It Hurts, Mommie!"

Be very, very careful not to let the bones' ends rub together or pierce through the skin. Keep the child quiet. Do not move him until the doctor arrives. Cuts that are bleeding badly call for pressure. If you have sterile gauze (do not use sterile cotton) or a clean handkerchief, cover cut and press hard against it."

Soil's "Fuel Tank" Needs Organic Matter, Farmers Are Advised

CHICAGO—Your soil burns up organic matter in producing crops, the same as your car uses up gasoline to keep running, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

And unless you refill the soil's organic matter "fuel tank," your soil will run out of gas, the statement says. That means low crop yields per acre, high production costs and smaller income.

"Organic matter is burned up through rapid decomposition in promoting crop growth," declares the statement. "No soil has an inexhaustible supply of organic matter. It can be easily drained off by poor management. Too many corn crops in succession will mine out the organic matter on even the best heavy clay and loam soils.

"When your soil loses its organic matter, it loses its ability to produce high yields. The removal of moisture-holding organic matter breaks down soil structure.

"The secret of balancing outgo and input of organic matter lies in good soil management. That means a rotation buttressed by deep-rooted legumes. You can't get a good stand of legumes with husky roots simply by seeding sweet clover or alfalfa. You have to lime the soil if tests indicate the need. You have to add plenty of fertilizer carrying phosphate and potash. Then you will get good growth and the legumes will do their job of repairing soil damage."

Royal, Yet Democratic

The houses of parliament are best known as the spot where popular will broke the power of Britain's kings. Actually they occupy a royal residence that was on the site from before the Norman conquest to the time of Henry VIII. Although parliament moved in after the Tudor kings, the building still has royal privileges exempting it from certain civic regulations.

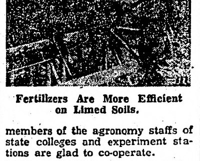
"Test, Don't Guess" Before Liming Soil, Agronomists Advise

CHICAGO—"Test, don't guess" when you plan to lime your soil, advises the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement made public here.

"Liming is the keystone of any well-planned soil building program," the statement points out. "Lime increases the efficiency of fertilizers. It sweetens acid soils and makes possible the growth of soil-building deep-rooted legumes.

"But be sure your soil needs lime before you apply it, and find out how much it needs.

"The safest course is to have your soil tested for its lime needs. County agricultural agents, vocational agricultural teachers or members of the agronomy staffs of state colleges and experiment stations are glad to co-operate.



Fertilizers Are More Efficient on Limed Soils.

"Liming is just one member of a soil building team. It has to be supported by others, if crop yields are to be increased, tilth improved and soil structure rebuilt. Other members of the team include generous use of phosphate and potash fertilizers, deep-rooted legumes regularly in the rotation, and the return to the soil of all possible animal manure and crop aftermath."

Get Federal Crop Insurance

Federal Crop Insurance is a program through which protection is provided to the farmer who is willing to pay a premium to protect what he invests in a crop. Price support protection for a crop doesn't provide any protection to a farmer the year when he not only fails to produce a profitable crop but loses what he has invested in his production effort. Price supports assure the farmer a reasonable profit in years when he gets a good crop, while crop insurance protects him against loss if his crop fails.

So we urge all our wheat and flax farmers who are eligible to provide themselves protection of their investments by supplying for Federal Crop Insurance.

Flax Good Cash Crop

Government crop reports reveal that during the past season flax again maintained its position as Minnesota's number one cash crop. While flax is normally expected to top small grains in return per acre, steadily improving yieldy and high prices have also given it an advantage over such crops as corn and soybeans. Even the bumper corn yields of the past season left that crop second to flax as cash producer in such states as Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, Montana and Wisconsin.

Last year's average yield of 11.1 bushels per acre was the highest in 43 years. Iowa led the northwest states with an average yield of 15 bushels per acre. Minnesota followed with 11.5; South Dakota, 9.5; and Montana 9. Nearly 90 per cent of the nations flax acerage is sown in these five states.

Lightning As a Fetiche

Fabulous tales about lightning still circulate throughout the world. In Europe, thousands of objects popularly identified as thunderbolts or thunderstorms are preserved in the homes of country folk, who regard them as charms against a number of harmful agencies.

Uncle Sam Says

Ten years can make a big difference. That youngster, now in pigtails, will be grown up and ready for college in 10 years. Or you may be ready to tackle that pet project of yours, a new home, retirement, or starting a small business. Yes, 10 years can make a difference in many things. Money, for instance. If you go about it right you can make today's money grow, right along with those plans for the future.

Figure, today, how much you'll need in 10 years. Then put aside the amount in U. S. Savings Bonds each week, enough to equal the total you have in mind, always remembering that for every three dollars you invest today, you will receive four dollars in 10 years. If you are on a payroll, join the Payroll Savings Plan where you work. If you are self-employed, enroll for the Bond-a-Month Plan at your own bank.

Shopping Tip

When purchasing a winter coat it is wise to remember the fact that the best linings are usually slippery so that the coat will go on and off easily; firm so the lining won't pull at the seams; color-fast; pre-shrunk; and of a material that won't wrinkle or stain.

Queens Sting

Queen bee has a longer sting than the worker, but rarely uses it except in combat or in killing other queens. Instances of a beekeeper being stung by a queen are extremely rare. The queen does not lose her sting in killing another queen.

Chicago's Population

The population of the Chicago metropolitan area approximates 5,314,000 persons. Seven million persons live within a 100-mile radius of Chicago, 10 million within a 150-mile radius, and 60 million within a 500-mile radius.

Southern Pulp, Paper

Southern states now are producing three times as much pulp and paper as they did in 1936. The annual value of the finished paper products is 750 million dollars.

What Is a Lake?

Fish are a crop; a lake is an aquatic pasture, community-owned and frequently overstocked, a condition that can cause poor fishing quite as much as understocking.

Finish for Collars

In home sewing, it's a good idea to finish the bottom of collars with thin, soft bias binding, so that they will not be bulky or scratchy under the neck of dresses.

Jumpoff Joe Creek

Jumpoff Joe creek in southern Oregon was so named when a pioneer named Joe jumped off a bank into a mountain stream, presumably for a swim.

Mulching Strawberries

Pine straw, which is considered the best material for mulching strawberries, should be applied during the winter after the first growing season.

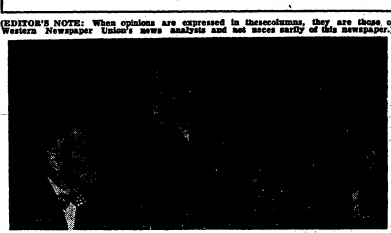
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Proposes Keeping Pledges In State of Nation Congress Talk; Mercy Killing Has Public Support

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in thesecolumns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not neces sarily of this newspaper.)



CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS PARLEY—These are the men who will chart and develop legislation to implement the Democratic party's platform pledges. Shown in a pre-congress opening conference are, left to right, President Truman; Rep. John W. McCormack (D. Mass.) house majority leader; Sen. Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.), senate majority leader and Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Texas.)

CONGRESS:

Big Order

In calm unhurried manner, President Truman outlined to the 81st congress his legislative proposals. To the surprise of no one he asked legislators to enact virtually every recommendation he made during his election campaign. He called for more taxes, authority to restore economic controls, a broad program of social legislation.

Along with corporations, individuals in the middle and higher-income brackets would share in the task of providing the four billion dollars more annual revenue which Mr. Truman says the government must have.

These are the major recommendations made by the President in his "state of the union" message:

INFLATION—Widen government control over bank and consumer credit, exports and transportation allocations; extend and strengthen rent control. Grant authority to regulate commodity speculation, allocate scarce key materials, control certain wages and prices, if necessary.

TAXES—Raise four billion dollars additional revenue for the government, mainly by taxing corporations, but also by boosting estate and gift taxes; consider increasing income taxes for the middle and upper pay brackets.

LABOR—Repeal the Taft-Hartley law and re-enact old Wagner act—but with bans against jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts and some provision for avoiding strikes in general industry. Boost minimum wage from 40 to 75 cents an hour.

BUSINESS—Strengthen anti-trust laws by closing loopholes that permit monopolistic mergers and consolidations.

FARM—Use price supports to keep farmers at a fair income level.

OTHERS—Extend social security; set up systems of pre-paid medical insurance. Aid state educational systems. Pass same civil rights proposals made to 80th congress. Push power flood control and navigation projects on the rivers. Maintain armed forces "sufficient to deter aggression." Pass universal training legislation.

MERCY KILLING:

Has Advocates

Euthanasia, a euphemism for "mercy killing," gained important support in New York state where hundreds of Protestant and Jewish religious leaders petitioned for legislation legalizing the practice.

THE QUESTION has agitated humanitarians and sociologists for centuries and there are many cases on record where mercy killings have been committed. Despite legal barriers and penalties, the record in such cases, for the most part, shows that juries are inclined to look with some leniency on the person who kills another to put him or her "out of his misery."

On an appeal to the emotions alone, much convincing argument for euthanasia may be presented. But, considered from all other angles with individual rights, possibility of criminal intent and other such factors involved, the practice could become highly dangerous.

The New York group advocating the measure included 379 Protestant and Jewish ministers of the Empire state, the largest group ever publicly to advocate euthanasia. The practice is now punishable as murder in all the 48 states. The petition was sent to every member of the New York legislature.

New Star

Dorothy Malone, in typical Hollywood garb—that is for picture releases such as this—was the first film player to be accorded stardom in 1949. Warner Brothers, her bosses, elevated her to filmland's top pinnacle for her performance in the film "One Sunday Afternoon."

THE MINISTERS' petition, sponsored by the Euthanasia Society of America, declared that the "ending of physical existence of an individual at his request, when afflicted with an incurable disease which causes extreme suffering is under proper safeguards not only medically indicated but also in accord with the most civilized and humane ethics and the highest concepts and practices of religion."

The safeguards: The sufferer must submit a petition, duly attested by himself and his physician, asking for euthanasia. This must be presented to a court of records which will appoint an investigative committee of physicians. If this committee agrees, the court may permit euthanasia.

CASTE SYSTEM:

Officers Adamant

The superiority which many army officers feel and affect over the G. I. came graphically to light in Berlin. There, in the biggest American club in the city, U. S. enlisted men were barred—but German frauleins were admitted.

G. I.'s and civilians got hot as the proverbial two-dollar pistol. Enlisted men won a temporary victory when the board of governors of the club suspended the month-old ban pending a special meeting to thresh out the matter.

One lieutenant-colonel epitomized the officer viewpoint. Ninety per cent of enlisted men were all right, he conceded, but it was the other 10 per cent which caused the ban.

"THERE ARE 10 per cent of the enlisted men," he said, "who do not know how to behave." Then he added the clincher: "We don't want these enlisted barbarians with officers and ladies." Evidently possessed of the power of his convictions, he asserted he would resign from the club if enlisted guests were permitted.

Significant was the reaction of the German civilians. In effect, they asked if such tactics had any place in the teaching of democracy. As one employe put it: "The ban simply means that everbody in Berlin can come into the club except an American enlisted man. That is not our idea of being American."

NEED SHERLOCK HOLMES

Thief Makes off With Pound Notes

British authorities would be very happy had the renewned Sherlock Holmes been real and available, since the country was facing two aggravating and puzzling problems.

Someone had stolen several sheets of one-pound sterling notes, amounting to approximately $560, from the extraordinarily guarded bank of England printing works.

As an added poser, someone had been going around smashing stained-glass windows in the Wolverhampton area of the Midlands. Circumspect, well-behaved Britons couldn't understand how anyone could do either of these reprehensible things.

An idea of how hard-to-catch may be the pound-note thief is provided in the fact that the money, stolen last summer, had only begun to circulate recently.

Cost of U. N. Is Low Compared With War

If the cost of maintaining the United Nations and 12 of its specialized agencies for one year were spread over the entire world, each person would be paying about ten cents a year. The total cost of operation is $225,251,635.

This sum is only about one-one thousandth of the annual cost of the second World war, and two-thirds of the bill goes for care of refugees and displaced persons.

Household Hints

If you use waxed paper to roll dough on, moisten the tabletop first, then lay the paper on it. This prevents the paper from slipping.

Try putting down on paper everything you are planning to serve for a week and work out how to use your leftovers to the best advantage.

Chopped pecans go well with the following kinds of cheese, as sandwich fillings; cream cottage, smoky, softened American cheddar.

Sprinkle baked custard with coconut and nutmeg before putting into the oven. Serve with peach sauce.

Roll leftover pie crust thin, cut in small squares, and bake in pie pans. Serve hot with a dab of jam or marmalade on each square, with tea.

The preference of red salmon over pink salmon is based on eye appeal rather than on higher food value. Both kinds contain similar amounts of niacin and riboflavin.

Marshall Plan Has Halted The Spread of Communism

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—When this country was struggling into early manhood, it was clear to our statesmen that if the tree of western democracy were to flourish and bring forth fruit in its season, it would have to be shielded from foreign interference.

The Monroe doctrine was enunciated. It was defensive, negative rather than positive; it simply said to the world: hold what you have, but take no more. It was a large order for a young nation. It covered a lot of territory. It worked.

The world grew older and smaller. A new, powerful anti-democratic force arose. American leaders decided that if the tree we had planted, now in full fruit, were to continue to live and flourish, the ramparts we watched would have to embrace and protect our friends whose liberties were threatened even more immediately than our own.

BAUKHAGE

The Marshall plan was enunciated in June of 1947. After thorough debate in congress, it finally was given sinews on June 28 of this year.

What is the score today?

Mere announcement of the idea is credited with checking Red revolution in Italy, with blocking the tide of Communist aggression in western Europe.

Now, after only seven months of functioning, I believe that objective observers will admit with Economic Cooperation Administrator Paul Hoffman, a hard-headed businessman, that "it has not only stopped the march of communism, but has turned the tide in the opposite direction." Only recently, Yugoslavia drew up agreements for trade with western Europe, thus smashing one hole in the iron curtain.

The ECA is just what it was labelled — "enlightened self-interest." To a chaotic and jittery Europe, it helped to bring: a 25 per cent increase in agricultural production over the previous year; industrial production above the pre-war level of 1938; relaxation of inflationary pressures in all the ERP countries except France and Greece.

Now what?

To convince our people that the game is worth the candle, that whatever the cost, this is the first bloodless war ever fought, that it is cheap insurance against a shooting war.

To convince congress that the charges, among others, that ECA is not being efficiently operated, that big business is being favored and little business slighted are unjust, or if the charges are true, correct them.

To Speak Or Not To Speak

Before congress convened, Washington was enjoying its usual influx of national conventions, among them two groups concerned with the oral cavity—the dentists and the speech-teachers of the nation. Although I was invited to attend sessions of both groups, I exercised my jaws at only one—the speech instructors' meeting.

The job of the speech instructor is, of course, to get the learners to use words to express ideas—a difficult task. Not that the raw material is lacking. The dictionary is full of words, and the air is thick with ideas. More difficult is getting the words out of the dictionary and the ideas out of the air into the learners' heads.

The next step is to get the learner to understand the meaning of the words he uses and then to translate them into ideas which somebody else can understand—aye!—there's the 'rub!

Consequently the speech instructors have not only a difficult, but a hazardous profession. Leaving a man alone with a lot of words is like leaving him in a laboratory with a lot of breakable atoms.

We know from recent reports that some of the scientists working with atomic energy go blind.

It's a wonder to me that more spech instructors don't go deaf.

I suppose speech teachers also teach that most useful corollary art—the use of words to conceal one's meaning. It is one I practice arduously.

After a decade and a half of broadcasting, most of my listeners haven't the slightest idea of what my politics are.

it infuriates me.

One point which was stressed at the speech conference was that the competition for power which ends in strife—domestic, industrial, international—is due chiefly to improper communication. I agree with that assumption.

There is no excuse for this in this day and age. It was different when a Cro-Magnon appeared at the door of a Neanderthaler cave in the year 23,000 B. C.—the mastodon on which he was riding having broken a tusk or an axle or something—and all the poor man wanted was to borrow an extra tusk. But since the Cro-Magnon was unable to communicate his perfectly peaceful desire, and before he could present his driver's license or his membership card in the loyal order of moose, for identity, the Neanderthaler, after shoving his wife in the corner and calling his dogs, would step out and welcome the unfortunate visitor with a hearty wallop on the cranium.

The result was probably a war between the Neanderthalers and the Cro-Magnons in which the Neanderthaler had a fifty-fifty chance of eating Cro.

Even if the innocent visitor had been able to grunt without mispronouncing his consonants and lacerating his labials, and even if his inhospitable host had listened to him, that host probably could not have digested his idea—as easily, at least as he later digested him.

We have words to work with, and thus are able to fashion the tools of communication. But unless the speech teachers (and all teachers) furnish the skills for the use of those words, the effort is in vain.

Unless the idea behind what we believe in can be communicated, (and it can't be, unless we agree on the meaning of the words) it withers on the vine.

Thus, the speech teacher must teach his pupils not only the medium of communication, but the means of using it—and convince them it has concrete value.

In the field of labor relations at home, or international understanding abroad, we never can hope to achieve a real bulwark for democracy unless a mental contact can be made, communications established—words and ideas joined so that they have a universal meaning and the message they convey can be digested.

As Eric Peterson, general secretary-treasurer of the International Association of Machinists, put it: "The need for better lines of communication between labor and management, and between the conciliator and disputing parties is a distinct challenge. For basically, the failure of these two groups to iron out their disputes without ill-will or violence is part and parcel of the broader problem of discord which plagues the world today in its quest for peace."

Peterson went on to say that a starting point for speech teachers might be to pay less attention to Demosthenes who became a great orator by practicing shouting until he could be heard above the roaring of the waves, and a little more to developing men whose voices may not be loud, but whose skilfull persuasion can be heard above the misunderstanding in men's hearts.

Speaking for management at the conference, Robert Chester Smith, director of industrial and personnel relations for the Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing company of Chicago, expressed his belief that each of the three members of the industrial triumvirate — the investor, the manager and the laboring man—"has been and continues to be too short-sighted. Each has been looking at the problem through its own specially-conditioned glasses, and has been unable to see either upward, downward or sidewise, and unfortunately not very far ahead."

John Q. Jennings, head of Industrial Relations for the Singer Manufacturing company, told an interesting story about how New York's great tugboat dispute last winter had been settled. The negotiations had dragged on for hours until well after midnight. Management and union men had basically agreed on the point at issue, but whenever they tried to phrase the agreement on paper, they got entangled in a maze of complicated terminology.

Shortly after 1 a.m., one of the negotiators happened to say in simple language what everyone else was trying to say in technical language. Somebody had a brilliant idea:

"Why not put it just that way in the contract?" They did—a two-sentence paragraph in ordinary rank and file English was inserted—a departure Jennings described as something brand-new in union contracts.

Does Government Management Work?

For a decade before World War II, France was moving toward control and management of her major industries. Private employers were unduly criticised. The profit system was represented as being abused. There were those who apparently found it easy to foment confusion and strife. Employees were set against employers. Production went down, standards of living went lower and lower. The security of France became doubtful, as dangers arose.

Then came the attack from Hitler. France fell quickly. Her divided condition, her hatreds and factionalism, made defense feeble and weak. Then five years later, liberation came. France again established her own government. But industrial confusion was still everywhere. Employers were so discredited by the propagandists that production couldn't get going.

From Chaos to Worse

The trouble was that the French people in general, fretted by the propagandists, couldn't get down to straight thinking. The public wanted more and more for doing less and less. The call for government to take over major industries became louder and louder.

Certain industries were therefore taken over in 1945 and 1946. One of these was the coal industry, in which the government took over ownership of the mines. It employed the management, and hired all the workers. The government was placed in full and complete control. Three years passed.

No Happy Family

You have perhaps read the news in recent weeks. Government employed miners went out on strike against their government employer. These government employees so seriously damaged government owned mines that government soldiers had to be sent out to protect the property and the mines. You might think that under Socialism, everybody would be just one happy family.

Not at all. Fighting has been going on between the government miners and the government soldiers. Property has been so damaged that some mines cannot be reopened for many months at best. Lives have been lost in the fighting, and many persons wounded. All this at a time when France is in a critical hour, when her people need coal and fuel. This is all wrong, and it certainly proves that government management cannot insure industrial peace.

Keep Industry Safe

There are other important observations. Very important is the fact that government ownership and management of mines did not increase production per man day. On the other hand, 4 million tons of coal have been lost, and the price has risen about 50 per cent. This has led to the diversion of 18 million Marshall Plan dollars from other purposes, to buy fuel for the French people.

Many who wanted government management are still not satisfied. Many of them are promoting a Communistic state, now. That would happen in America. There is no indication that government management would work any better here. It is only a step toward Communism, which we do not want. Let us work in every way to preserve private management, a system which has helped America to achieve the highest wages and best living conditions ever known.

We Both Won This One

Blew my top the other morning when I discovered a shirt I'd put on had two buttons missing.

"Joe," the missus says, "do you ever read what you write? For a man who writes newspaper pieces all about tolerance, you sometimes show a lot of race prejudice."

"Race prejudice!" I hollers. "No one can accuse me of that." "I mean prejudice against the entire human race," she interrupts with a smile. "Why get mad at the world over two little buttons?" That took the wind out of me.

From where I sit (as I told the missus that evening), a lot of us sometimes get too worked up over little things... little differences of opinion or taste. One person prefers beer or ale, another prefers cider or lemonade. But why criticize the other fellow just because his tastes aren't the same as ours? "That sounds more like you, Joe," she laughs, snipping off a thread. (It so happens she was sewing on buttons.)

Doing Things Together

"The American success is the story of large numbers of people doing something together. When an enterprise prospers, everybody connected with it prospers, and the success legend must be divided among them." The statement was made by Mr. Crawford Greenewalt, president of the Du Pont Company, who believes that America's unique position was achieved "not because we have more coal or more gold or more land, but because we have more incentive, more venture, more determination." Now, when the rest of us get out and talk that way, I believe that we will begin to see the greatness of America.

No Mere Accident

If management thinking at Du Pont is any key to the attitudes generally held in industry, I think we may all be encouraged to expect greater and greater things as America goes ahead year after year. Indeed, "the greatest good to the greatest number of people" is a description that just fits America. But it is no accident. It includes the ways we cooperate, capital with labor and labor with capital —until actually there are no differences.

Better Than Average

When you consider that persons willing to deny themselves put up their savings to the tune of $13,500 for each worker at Du Pont, you see how the stockholders cooperated. That makes a good solid investment behind the average Du Pont worker. It's higher than average. Proper and wise use of tools and human energy enabled this average worker to collect $10,600 for his part of production. That's higher than average.

Out of this $10,600 had to come costs of producing the goods. About 42 per cent, or $4,410, went for raw materials, power, and other necessary expense. This average worker himself was paid $3,330. The government tax bill was $1,030. There was put aside $730 to replace and modernize tools that wore out. All these costs came to $9,500, which taken from $10,600 leaves a profit of $1,100. On an investment of $13,500 that's about 8 per cent. That's not bad either.

What Makes America?

However, stockholders were asked to leave $280 of this profit in the business, making $13,780 for this average worker to use the following year. Stockholders were then paid $820 in dividends, or about a 6 per cent return on their money. This is the way that Du Pont's annual report reads, in terms of each worker. It represents wonderful coordination of the worker-management team. When you duplicate this many times, with big and little business, you've got what makes America.

The measure of America, then, is how well all of us cooperate. We've done a wonderful job in the past, despite misunderstandings here and there. This system, that permits us to use all our talents and all our resources, is sometimes called "free competitive enterprise." But it is also a wonderful adventure in cooperation. More than any other land today, more than can be found of any nation in history—we have succeeded in bringing "the greatest good to the greatest number of people."

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Who's A Foreigner?

While I'm waiting for a haircut the other day, Slim Hartman lets slip with a crack about those "foreigners" who live by the depot.

"Now wait a minute, Slim," snaps Doc Sherman. "Don't forget we're all 'foreigners' more or less. Some of our families have simply been here longer than others. But even if they came over on the Mayflower, they were foreigners to the Indians."

Slim gets a little red and you could see that Doc had him. "And the reason they came here," he goes on, "was to find freedom to do and think as they wanted to so long as they didn't tramp on the rights of the other fellow."

From where I sit, America became the great land it is today through our being tolerant of different people and different tastes—whether it's a taste for square dancing or waltzing, radio or movies, goat's milk or a temperate glass of sparkling beer.

Get Federal Crop Insurance

Federal Crop Insurance is a program through which protection is provided to the farmer who is willing to pay a premium to protect what he invests in a crop. Price support protection for a crop doesn't provide any protection to a farmer the year when he not only fails to produce a profitable crop but loses what he has invested in his production effort. Price supports assure the farmer a reasonable profit in years when he gets a good crop, while crop insurance protects him against loss if his crop fails.

So we urge all our wheat and flax farmers who are eligible to provide themselves protection of their investments by supplying for Federal Crop Insurance.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Record Budget Given to Congress; Acheson Confirmation Predicted; British Say Israel Menaces Peace

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

RECORD BUDGET:

Asked of Congress

President Truman, presenting a proposal for the largest peacetime budget in U. S. history to the congress, was greeted with the expected reaction. Democrats applauded, Republicans instantly demanded deep slashes in recommended outlay. It became evident quickly that the fight on adoption of the budget would be carried out strictly along party lines.

THE PRESIDENT declared it would take 41 billion, 858 million dollars to run the government right for the next year. And the punch line was that half of every American tax dollar would be spent to hold back the Communist tide in the world.

On a party line basis, approval of the budget was assured, assuming, of course, that the Democrats hold fast. The President had a comfortable majority in both houses and there should be no difficulty in getting his proposal adopted.

But the 41 billion-plus figure wasn't all. Mr. Truman served notice he will ask more funds later to supply arms to non-Communist nations, a step which would push the budget even higher.

THE ONLY possible bar to approval of the Truman budget was public reaction to the plan to finance with 50 cents of every American dollar anti-Red activities abroad. Would the people go along with American foreign policy and the theories of policy-makers that such a step was the only answer to Communist menace? Apparently the President is confident, because of his victory at the polls, that the people will support him in such a move and thus showed no hesitancy in his budget proposals nor in making his declaration that he plans to call upon the American people for even more money to stem the Communist tide.

Already thoughts are turning to the 1950 congressional elections and congressmen whose senses were not completely lulled by the 1948 Democratic sweep, may want to sound out the public sentiment on the hugh expenditure program. If that is the case, public opinion may be the final factor in adoption of the budget.

PALESTINE:

Toil And Trouble

The British lion was roaring at a gnat.

In a prepared statement, the English government declared that Palestine developments are "gravely threatening world peace."

Coupled with the dither was a report that Ernest Bevin, British foreign secretary, had offered to resign because of his Palestine policy and that Prime Minister Attlee had refused to accept the resignation.

THIS WAS instantly and emphatically denied.

All these developments came as Israel formally filed with the U. N. security council at Lake Success a complaint that the British were fomenting an "artificial crisis" over Palestine by troop movements and various actions just as negotiations were about to open with Egypt.

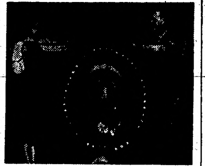
The British foreign office statement warned that the security council has been "losing control over events" and said it had a reason to fear new Jewish violations of the cease-fire orders in the Holy Land area.

Meanwhile, the critics of British policy in the Middle East prepared to demand that Secretary Bevin explain how it happened that five RAF planes were shot down by the Israelis near the Palestine border. Britain's air ministry asserted all five planes were shot down while flying over Egypt.

IT COULD NOT be denied that the situation was difficult. Broken down to its basic essentials, it is a condition where one people must, or have been told they must, give way to the infiltration of another people—the Jews moving into Palestine and the Holy Land area, the Arabs moving out. It has never been a secret that British sympathies, for whatever reason, lie with the Arabs and John Bull looks with jaundiced eye on the partition action and the influx of the Jews. But the United States and some other nations have sided with the movement to return the Jews to their homeland, and thus the stalemate.

It may yet require organization of and action by a United Nations police force to settle the affair.

Truman's Flag



Here is the silk flag which was presented to President Truman at his inauguration January 20. It is held by Lucy E. Notaro, civilian employe, and Brig, Gen. Hugh B. Hester, commander of the Philadelphia quartermaster depot. The flag was made in the embroidery section of the depot.

ACHESON:

Should Make It

General belief was that Dean Acheson would be confirmed by the senate as secretary of state. Named by President Truman to succeed George C. Marshall, Acheson is certain to be taken over the hurdles in public hearings on his appointment.

Protege of Justice Felix Frankfurter and former intimate and employe of Franklin D. Roosevelt, intimate with and former employer of Alger Hiss and a law partner of Donald Hiss, Acheson must inevitably be reminded of these facts by some of his interrogators.

On the other hand, he can point to a long and distinguished record of public service in which his loyalties have never been questioned. But in view of the current spy hunt in Washington and Acheson's connection with some of its principal figures, it would be little less than a miracle if his appointment were to be unquestioned.

According to the record, Acheson began his state department career with an attitude sympathetic to Russia—that is, to the extent that he believed the United States should do everything possible to get along with the Russians. But, since Yalta and Potsdam, observers report that attitude has changed and he is now one of the most determined anti-appeasers.

The ghost of Franklin Roosevelt will walk and the echoes of the Yalta and Potsdam parleys will rustle as the Acheson hearings progress. But with Truman supporters firmly in the saddles, there is little doubt of Acheson's final confirmation.

DESTRUCTION:

Nothing to Chance

Destruction would be certain . . . there would be nothing left to chance if military scientists perfect their newest idea of a guided missile. This would be no "ordinary" guided missile. Instead, it would be one that would identify its target from a picture, then attack it.

That's no fantastic dream of the men who plan the weapons of war. A hint of its imminence was contained in a "glossary of guided missile terms" made public by the federal research and development board.

The glossary's reference to the subject was terse, saying merely this:

"Guidance, homing, active—A system of homing guidance wherein the source, for illuminating the target, and the receiver are carried within the missile."

Here was the general idea:

A guided missile (it could be a rocket or merely a pilotless plane) fitted with a television set and a picture of the intended target—perhaps an aerial photograph of a city. The missile is launched in the general direction of the target. When it arrives at a point when the pattern of the picture matches what its television "eye" sees, the missile "homes in" on the target.

That's an over simplified description because thousands of complex electronic actuating computing devices must make instantaneous and accurate reckonings; link the "eye" and the "brain" of the missile to its controls, and relay back to the base from which the missile was launched information on where it is and what it "sees."

Man's ingenuity in developing destructive devices apparently has not yet reached its zenith.

CHAIN STORES:

Food Dollar Chart

Despite the prevalence of many convictions to the contrary, consumers who lay a dollar down on the counter of a chain store gets food that costs an average of 83 cents.

This leaves 17 cents to the chain with which it must pay all its incidental expenses and 10 cents of this, or about three-fifths, goes out in wages to employes of the chain.

IN PAYING 17 cents to the chain the customer thus lays out that amount for the chain's combined wholesale and retail services. After the 10 cents goes to employes, the remainder is allocated in this manner: one and one-half cents for rent and maintenance; two cents for warehousing and cartage; a little over one cent for shrinkage, spoilage and theft, and one-half cent for advertising. This leaves from one to one and one-half cents net profit to the chain, less income taxes of one-half to one cent.

These figures were developed in the latest in a series of price studies by the family economics bureau of the Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

The survey disclosed that individual markups vary widely, of course, within the store, being much higher than the general 17 per cent average on perishable items like fresh fruit and vegetables, and much lower than average on very competitive staples like sugar.

ACCORDING TO the study result, the average food chain markup before the war was 22½ cents—a third greater than today. Today's far greater dollar volume per store, and therefore per employe, is mainly responsible for the lower handling costs per dollar of sales.

Should either prices or total volume shrink materially, the cent or so profit margin per dollar would vanish rather quickly and "red ink" would take its place.

Before the war, the farmer received an average of 40 cents of the consumer's food dollar and 60 cents went for processing, canning, shipping, wholesaling and retailing. Today the farmer gets 53 cents per dollar and 47 cents covers all the various steps in processing and distribution.

LONGER LIFE:

Science Has Key

If parents would insure long lives for their progeny, they must marry young.

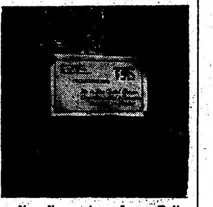
DR. I. A. LANSING of the Washington university school of medicine, St. Louis, reported to the Gerontological society of New York the discovery of a mysterious chemical, called X, which seems to time how fast a human being grows old. "X" is something that parents transmit to their offspring and it is set like a clock, either for long or short life.

The age clock was found in rotifiers, but a little human evidence was sighted. Rotifiers are microscopic water bugs, swimming with long lashes that make them look like whirling dervishes. The setting of the X-clock in rotifiers depend on how early they mated.

IT APPEARS, Dr. Lansing stated, that the amount of X stuff in a fertilized egg sets the clock. When there is little X, the rotifier lives long. As parents get older, the eggs contain more X and life is shorter. He also said that the mysterious stuff also regulates growth—as the volume of X increases, growth stops.

The human evidence is indirect, Dr. Lansing said. A study by Dr. Louis Dublin, showed a tendency for children of young parents to live longer than those born later. And, it must be remembered, humans come from eggs.

New Air Postcard



Air line stewardess Betty Scheiner displays the newest form of communication—slightly larger than natural, of course. It is the new four-cent air mail postcard which went on sale at post offices over the nation on January 10. The postal department expects vast popularity for the new card.

Extremes Irk Reds

Russian designers have been told to forget extreme fashions. Styles for the mass consumer are needed instead, said senior inspector of trade in Moscow, V. Syrov.

He wrote in Trud that the artistic council of Moscow's biggest department store recently considered 672 new styles. He said he was astonished that 309 of these were for hats. The artistic council picks the styles ordered for the manufacturers.

What 'Pressing' Means

The term "pressing" means setting the iron directly down upon fabric and lifting it directly up without to and fro action. Woolens should always be pressed to avoid ruining the shape of the garment and the surface finish of the material. Likewise, laces, nets and other delicate materials should be pressed to avoid tearing the material.

Chungking

China's wartime capital, Chungking, was noted for its vast system of new and old tunnels piercing the surrounding hills. From these rocky labyrinths, equipped with seats and lights, the city's population of hundreds of thousands kept civic life going through years of relentless Japanese bombing.

Quartzite Rock

In the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia the quartzite rock, used in making silicon, chrome and tungsten alloys is so hard that it defies steel drills. Oxyacetylene torches burn as far as 20 feet into the surrounding rock and the quartzite is blasted out with dynamite.

Shortest Presidential Term

William Henry Harrison was the first President to die in office. According to the World Book encyclopedia, he was also the first member of the Whig party to be elected. Harrison's term was the shortest in American history—only thirty days.

Household Hints

Use up leftover pickle juice by pouring it over sliced cooked beets and allowing the beets to marinate in it. Serve the beets as a relish or on salad greens.

When washing cut glass or pressed glass articles, apply sudsy water with a small hand brush to get into the crevices.

Mattresses should be sunned and aired at least once a week. Strip off bedding and leave windows wide open for at least an hour.

Seamstresses will save time, effort and thread if they use scotch tape instead of basting material.

When you cut ribbon off a roll to make hair bows, use pinking shears to avoid frayed ends.

Before sending shirts, blouses or other garments with pockets to the laundry, make sure you clean out the pockets. Besides the fact that you might lose something valuable, the contents might ruin the garment.

A wooden skewer is just the article to dip into those corners of the cake and bread tins to get after the obstinate crumbs.

Washington Digest

Is U.S. Going Socialist? It's World-Wide Argument

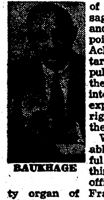
By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON.—As congress sharpens its teeth for the "True-Deal" program (The "true being for Truman), some of the gentlemen who have watched things going on behind the scenes in Washington for a long time (maybe too long) have a habit of blinking and saying in hushed voice:—

"Say, is America going socialist without knowing it?"

Long before the November election a number of European Statesmen, editors, professional politicians and others who are backing the various socialist and socialistic-inclined governments, including Britain's, were getting really worried lest a probable Republican victory should make an emphatically capitalistic America less sympathetic toward left-of-center regimes.



BAUKHAGE

The Truman upset caused them to whoop with joy. After they read the President's state of the union message on January 5, and after his appointment of Dean Acheson as secretary of state, they pulled out a chair on the left side of the international table, expecting him to sit right down and join them.

What was probably as much wishful thinking as anything else caused the official Socialist party organ of France to hail the administration program as definitely socialistic. Most of the rest of the French press took about the same view, even to the somewhat lonely, pro-capitalistic Figaro which said the message was "close" to socialism.

The same view was taken by the left-wing press in other European countries—(I'm not counting the Communists who merely rang the old propaganda changes). However, the independent Manchester Guardian, long known as the rock of liberalism and likewise as an outstanding voice in British journalism, took a different tone. The Guardian always has been exceedingly well informed concerning the United States and probably understands America as well as any foreign newspaper. It said:

> "Mr. Truman's program is an indication that socialism is not the only path for the left. Its goal might be called the insurance state. Its method the deliberate shortening of the odds against the weak. But without abandoning the basically individualist way of life which is accepted as characteristically American."

Comment from the extreme right in this country, in congress and out, chose to see Skipper Truman charting a course for the Ship of State which veered far to the left of center, in fact headed straight for the rocks on which free enterprise, individual initiative, in fact all phases of capitalism, would be sunk without a trace.

That, however, was not the opinion of the majority of the Republican party, and, already signs are showing that it isn't the intention of the majority of the Democrats to let such a catastrophe overtake us, even if they think the Skipper would be willing to risk it, which they don't believe he is.

The alarmists point to the rather startling suggestion on the part of the President that the government study production with a view to offering loans to the steel and other industries for expansion of plants and increased production.

If the companies refuse to cooperate, it was suggested the government-owned steel plants would be erected. That does sound like a long step toward nationalization of industry. But other observers, both those who consider the idea fatal to free enterprise and those who believe in such government-run ventures as the Tennessee Valley Authority, consider it more of a threat than a promise.

In that connection the recent controversy behind the iron curtain which had finally leaked out in specific and detailed form is interesting. One document consists of reports of a three-day conference of Soviet economists held last May, the other is a study of Russian economy during World War II, by a member of the all-powerful politburo. Both documents attack the theories of Eugene Varga, internationally known Russian economist and former director of the World Institute of Economics in Moscow.

Those 'Anxious' Russian Leaders

This controversy, according to Walter Lippman, may be the real basis of President Truman's Kansas City statement that there were "certain leaders" in Russia who were "exceedingly anxious" to reach an understanding with the United States. Even if the row among the economists wasn't the inspiration for the President's mysterious remarks, it might indicate that there is or was an element in the Soviet leadership which felt it was better to try to get along with us.

The explanation of the controversey among Russian economists is this: Soviet foreign policy, specifically maintenance of the cold war, is supposed to be based on a belief that the United States is headed directly toward another depression. This "bust" will so sap our strength that all the Soviets will have to do is take us over with little or no real military struggle. (The revolt of the proletariat). We'll be too down and out to help anti-communist Europe. The anti-Communist countries will fall easily into Communist control. Then we can be beaten largely by infiltration, fifth column "action committees" and other methods because there will be general unemployment, discontent and general chaos.

This belief is based on the teachings of Marx and Lenin that capitalism is bound to destroy itself because it produces "boom and bust" cycles which grow increasingly worse, and therefore, it is impossible for a capitalistic country to try to do anything permanent for the masses to increase their standard of living.

Now, however, along comes Varga, introducing a new argument. He argues that by adopting measures which he describes as "state socialism" any major depression in the United States can be prevented or at least postponed for 10 or 20 years. If this thesis were accepted by the Soviets it would be wiser to cooperate with the United States and other non-Communist countries, rather than to take for granted that our economic system as well as theirs is going to continue for some time. On that theory it would be to the Soviet's interests, for the present at least, for the Kremlin and the White House to play ball.

What are the measures of "state socialism" Varga is talking about?

The various social and welfare proposals like expanded social security, national health insurance, federal aid to education, undertakings like the Tennessee Valley Authority and the many other reforms which started under the New Deal, and which President Truman now urges should be carried forward or expanded.

In the early part of the President's state of the union message he announced in popular language the underlying theory of his administration. He said:

> "We have rejected the discredited theory that the fortunes of the Nation should be in the hands of the privilged few. We have abondoned the 'trickle-down' concept of national prosperity. Instead, we believe that our economic system should rest on a democratic foundation and that wealth should be created for the benefit of all."

Whether or not the majority of the people have rejected that theory remains to be seen. There are still many people, who believe that no country can be prosperous unless it is strong at the top and that it cannot be strong at the top, that business and industry cannot prosper, unless free enterprise have the widest liberty possible. That capital should be encouraged by the incentive of profit to take risks and challenge competition. That government interference destroys the initiative which has made the country great. That once business is unshackled by federal bureaucracy, the benefits flow (not trickle) down and spread out to benefit the whole people.

The National Association of State Chambers of Commerce, one of a hundred business organizations testifying against a bill which would permit the TVA to build a new steam plant at Johnsonville, said:

> ". . . this government cannot continue much longer to aid in th growth of tax-exempt or government-owned enterprises, this narrowing the nation's tax base, without throwing greater burdens upon the remainder of the taxpayers and without gradually strangling free enterprise to death."

Open your eyes wide before marriage, and close them a trifle afterward.

Neither wealth nor beauty are enduring enough to make a successful marriage.

There is no thinking which pays so well as fore-thought before the wedding march.

Marriage, as an institution, is a success, but human failures cannot succeed at it.

The most foolish acts of our lives are committed when we talk of things which are none of our business.

The American Way...

America inherited numerous customs and sports from foreign lands. From Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Austria and parts of Germany came a race of outdoor sport-loving people. Minnesota, fortunately, was the choice of these pioneers who brought with them that healthy outdoor, winter activity—skiing.

Another custom of these folks is the habit of relaxing and enjoying a glass of beer following an afternoon of sport, for that is the American way of living, which spells good fellowship and sensible moderation, and our right to enjoy this living belongs to our American heritage of personal freedom.

Beer belongs...... enjoy it

Skoglund-Davidson at Wash.

Prospects for better farm price legislation are good, Roger Skoglund and Hilmer Davidson learned in Washington during their visit to the capital January 23 to 27. They were members of a party of more than 150 Farmers Union members from six states, all of whom were awarded free transportation to the capital for Farmers union membership work. Four other similar groups have visited or will visit the capital in the next few weeks.

Members of the party from this state called on Senators Thye and Humphrey and on Congressmen Harold Hagen, Fred Marshall and Carl Anderson in the interests of legislation supported by Farmers Union.

At a meeting with Senator Elmer Thomas, Chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, they urged 100% of parity support prices for family type farmers and a farm storage program, patterned after REA, which would help provide adequate storage for farm products (1) on farms, (2) through co-operatives, and (3) in government facilities leased to farmers.

All state groups urged their Senators and Congressmen to support a Missouri Valley Administration, proposed by Senators Murray, Humphrey, Gillette and others, which appears to have a good chance of passage at this session. President Truman, now at work on a Columbia Valley Authority proposal, has assured MVA supporters that he also favors their proposal and will support it.

In their calls the groups also urged a program for peace, with support of the United Nations, the International Food and Agriculture Organization and a World Food Board. They urged an international wheat agreement They opposed Universal Military Training.

During their stay in the capital, the group found time to visit the U. S. Department of Agriculture, many historic places, the National Farmers Union headquarters and the Capitol. National President James G. Patton, state presidents and the NFU Washington staff acted as hosts.

Royal, Yet Democratic

The houses of parliament are best known as the spot where popular will broke the power of Britain's kings. Actually they occupy a royal residence that was on the site from before the Norman conquest to the time of Henry VIII. Although parliament moved in after the Tudor kings, the building still has royal privileges exempting it from certain civic regulations.

Boy Scout Week 6 to 12

Did you know that citizenship training can be an adventure? Take time out during Boy Scout Week, which marks the 39th Birthday of Boy Scouts of America, to observe in action the theme "Adventure - that's Scouting" and see it's far reaching effects. Community service projects, emergency service training, safety education and conservation practice, all of these challenging activities are undertaken by the Boy Scouts of America.

Next Sunday is Boy Scout Sunday. It will be marked in countless churches of all denominations. Scouts and leaders will attend religious services in uniform. The Men's Brotherhood of the Nazareth Lutheran church, the sponsoring body of the local troop, have found many advantages in giving their boys Scouting opportunities. It enables them to add a program of youth-centered character and citizenship activities, under the general auspices and atmosphere of the institution. This tends to strengthen the loyalties of youth toward the institution, because Scouting has been willing to become a part of the institution. All this brings benefits for the whole community, and stimulating satisfaction for our boys.

The local Boy Scouts are Vernon Engen, George Fricker, Robert Johnson, Harold Ness, Glenn Larson, Emery Horien, Alf Movick, Keith Movick, Vernon Larson, Milton Jorgenson and Roger Langlie who will observe Boy Scout Sunday together with their Scoutmasters Hartley Peterson and Murnett Johnson.

The following gave Dianne Peterson a birthday party at her home Wednesday evening: Mr. and Mrs. Ray Sagstuen and baby Mr. and Mrs. L. WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Begins Busiest Four Years; GOP Wins First Senate Vote Test; Bevin Offers Critics Olive Branch

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

INAUGURATION:
Brief Interlude

President Truman could lay valid claim to the title "busiest man in the world." The inaugural behind him, the nation's chief executive was up to his neck in problems, both foreign and domestic.

ON THE HOME FRONT, there was a little matter of having congress impliment Democratic campaign pledges and provide funds for the continuing armament expansion. Abroad, with this nation committed to the gargantuan task of saving the world from communism, the problem was equally monumental.

But for awhile, on January 20, Harry Truman, Missouri farm boy who rose to the presidency of the United States, once by succession, currently on his own vote-getting prowess, relaxed, basked in public adulation, may even have forgotten the tremendous pressure under which he labored.

ORIGINALLY PLANNED as a more or less sedate affair, with this atmosphere desired by Truman, the inauguration, instead, was turned into one of the most lavish and spectacular since Andrew Jackson rode into the top spot.

Packed and jammed, Washington gave a hero's welcome to the World War I artillery captain. Truman buttons, Truman pictures, Truman banners were greatly in evidence and the President, seeing these and the vast multitudes, must have wondered if there were anyone at all who voted against him in the November election.

BUT THE INTERMISSION from duty was brief. The parade, the swearing in ceremonies, the round of gala capital affairs that night, and the next day, Harry Truman was again on the job.

Peace has been his rallying cry. Its importance marked all his utterances. Now he was buckled down to the job of trying to preserve it. Men of good will everywhere in the world were wishing him success.

MONKEYS:
Up in the Air

For whatever benefit it may be to scientists or anthropologists, two sad-eyed dogs will not calm 300 Rhesus monkeys.

THIS WAS graphically, if somewhat disturbingly demonstrated when 30 crates of the monkeys arrived in New York by plane from the Azores.

The trip started sedately enough with all the monkeys locked in their crates. Two large, sad-eyed dogs were along because someone had said their presence would tend to keep tranquil the monkeys' spirits.

Somehow most of the monkeys got out of the crates and suddenly there were monkeys in the cockpit, monkeys through the plane, monkeys peeping out of windows and monkeys even trying to liberate other monkeys.

Capt. Miguel Braganca and his crew, heavily outnumbered, was forced to stay in the forward part of the ship while the monkeys cavorted. The monkeys saw to that. Says the captain: "They kept hanging on the cockpit door and watching us all the time."

When the plane reached La Guardia field, about a dozen chattering monkeys were starting to climb out the windows, but eight airline cargomen joined the crew and with brooms and blankets finally snared the truants.

The monkeys were consigned for infantile paralysis research.

SIX "NO'S":
Was It Revolt?

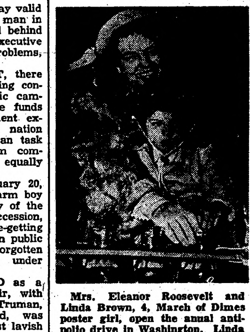
Six Democrats joining with senate Republicans gave the GOP victory in the first test of strength since the 81st congress convened. The issue may have been trivial, but the result burned Democratic leaders. Scott Lucas, Illinois, successor to Vice-President Barkley as majority floor leader, "sputtered." Barkley was also put out. For, it appeared, the result was an unexpected as it was "humiliating."

THE ISSUE was exemption of inauguration tickets from federal amusement taxes. The exemption slid through the house 199 to 49, so one can imagine the surprise when it failed in the senate.

Chief target of administration censure was Kentucky's Virgil Chapman.

But those who remembered the Kentucky campaign would recall that Chapman showed no little independence in his drive for votes

Open Campaign



Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Linda Brown, 4, March of Dimes poster girl, open the annual antipolio drive in Washington. Linda was cured of polio through the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

He did not completely endorse the Democratic platform, would not be led into enthusiastic "me too" declarations.

Lucas was vehement. "On whose coattails did Chapman come to the senate," he demanded, "the Truman-Barkley coattails or those of Dewey and Warren?" Other angry Democrats rushed to point out that Chapman ran 100,000 votes behind Truman and Barkley in Kentucky.

JOINING CHAPMAN in the "no" votes were Democratic Senators Byrd, Johnson, Maybank, McCellan, Robertson and Russell.

Chapman didn't take criticism lying down. He declared, in effect, that if such taxes are to be removed, it ought to be done in regular legislative process, not by hurried action on the floor.

Republicans were more metaphorical. They argued that since there is a tax on powder used on babies, a woman dressing up for an inauguration ball should regard her powder as more of a luxury than powder applied to a baby. This statement followed an effort to exempt baby powder for federal taxation which failed of approval.

OLIVE BRANCH:
Bevin Recants

British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin apparently was relenting in his stand on the Palestine situation. Gingerly he held out an olive branch: Britain's willingness to release Jewish immigrants of fighting age now held in Cyprus, his personal and strong support of peace negotiations between Israelis and Egyptians at Rhodes.

Observers declared this position a "deliberate and genuine effort on his part . . . to seek peace with Israel and his critics in Britain and in the U. S.

WHATEVER MOTIVATED the foreign secretary, there was no overlooking the fact that criticism had been mounting both in England and America. With the pressure continuing, the situation might have resolved itself into one holding the very political future of Bevin.

The foreign minister also indicated that de facto recognition of the government of Israel was being seriously considered. If that step were taken by Great Britain, it would mean the death knell of Arab hopes for continuation of strife or any eventual triumph in the Holy Land controversy.

DIXIECRATS:
Rough Road

The road ahead looked rough for state's righters.

Democratic administration forces were showing little patience with southern old-liners who had bolted the party in the presidential election.

THE PURGE SWORD swung first at the un-American activities committee and two heads tumbled. They were those of Representative John A. Rankin, fiery Mississippian, and F. Edward Herbert, Louisiana, both of whom supported the state's rights ticket against President Truman in November.

Rankin, along with everyone else, knew the blow was coming, accepted it calmly.

BONUS BILL:
Amvets Ready

Amvets, World War II veterans organization, has announced its intention to ask Congress for an immediate veterans bonus which they think might cost as much as 67 billion dollars. The organization said it will carry its proposal to congress soon.

A similiar bill prepared by the Veterans of Foreign Wars is in the house hopper, having been offered by Rep. Rankin, Mississippi.

Cupid Curbed

The army is making it tougher for American G.I.'s to marry German frauleins. In the first place, many army authorities and chaplains suspect too many German girls are using marriage as an excuse to escape from the hard life of occupied Germany to the United States. There is also an apparent desire to protect young draftees expected to start arriving soon in Germany.

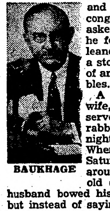
Tax Bill Is Rabbit Stew To Congressman Doughton

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Another rabbit stew has been served up to Rep. Robert L. Doughton of North Carolina, and he's all ready for it. Representative Doughton, I might suggest if you don't know it, is not only the oldest member of the house of representatives (85) but likewise the oldest hand at handling tax measures.

He had to step down from the chairmanship of the ways and means committee for the brief Republican interlude. Now he's back at the old stand, sharpening the butcher knife again.

But to get back to rabbit stew. Last season when President Truman vetoed the second Knutson tax-cutting bill and and fired it back at congress, a reporter asked Doughton how he felt about it. He leaned back and told a story, for he's fond of answering in parables.



BAUKHAGE

A Tarheel housewife, it seems, served her husband rabbit stew every night for a week. When the second Saturday night came around and the same old dish with it, the husband bowed his head as usual, but instead of saying grace he was heard to mutter:

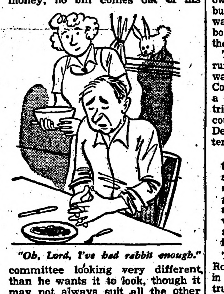
"Rabbit's rough. Rabbit's tough. Oh, Lord, I've had rabbit enough"

That, opined Mr. Doughton, was the way he felt about the tax bills.

But he has to help meet the biggest peacetime budget ever submitted to a congress and he's ready for it.

In the 38 years that he has represented the state of North Carolina in the congress, the habits of the dean of the octogenarian's club in the lower house have changed very little since the last time. I explored them in some detail more than a score of years ago.

He has earned a tremendous respect from the men who work on fiscal matters in the house of representatives where the money bills have to originate. And because he has a theory of his own about collecting and spending the people's money, no bill comes out of his committee looking very different than he wants it to look, though it may not always suit all the other members. Doughton doesn't go so far as to say that fiscal legislation should be non-partisan, but he does say it ought to be as non-provincial and as pro-national as possible.



"Oh, Lord, I've had rabbit enough."

His experience in collecting money that ought to be collected goes back a long way.

One story involves a man he went to see about a horse—two horses, to be exact. This man had bought a team from Doughton (the congressman is still a farmer in his own right, though he has to spend more time away from home than he used to). Later on the man wrote that he didn't think the span was worth the $800 he had agreed to pay and wouldn't pay it. The deal had been negotiated at a distance and the principals had never met. So one day Doughton dropped in at the farm and said he wanted to look over a good team. The man showed several, but none seemed to suit Mr. Doughton.

"All right," said the man, "I'll show you the best pair you ever saw in your life."

He brought out the horses recently acquired from Mr. Doughton, but still unpaid for. And what might they be worth? Well considerably over $800.

Mr. Doughton introduced himself and didn't have much trouble in collecting.

There is another reason why Doughton is a god man to have on the collecting end of a bargain—if you aren't the debtor. He's a farmer, true, but he is also a banker, and he works at both when he isn't in Washington. He doesn't keep banker's hours, however. He goes to his office at 6:30 a.m., works throughout the day, and he's often back in the office after dinner. He lives right across the plaza from the Capital.

For the first 45 years or so of his life, Mr. Doughton held no elective office, but he managed to find time for an active interest in his community which is deep in the Carolina hills. Laurel Spring, N. C., is still his home. He was born on his parent's farm near there. His father, wounded in the war between the states, died when he was a grown boy. His mother was keenly active to her last hours, interested in the day's mail and the daily newspaper to the last.

Inheriting some land from his father, the boy started off for himself, gradually acquiring more until he became a livestock raiser and farmer. Then he entered business, finally becoming president of a bank.

He has described himself as a horse trader. There are many tales that have grown up about his astuteness that, if embellished by repetition, are not doubted by those who have watched his steady advancement in congress.

He entered under a Republican regime—President Taft's—accepted minor committee appointments, but rose rapidly to the position he holds today—chairman of the powerful ways and means committee.

One of the horse-trader stories he tells is this: after disposing of some animals he had meant to sell, he was made a very attractive offer for the horse he was riding—his own saddle horse. Done, he took the money, turned over the bridle, put the saddle under his arm and walked back home, 70 miles, says tradition, under his own power.

There doesn't seem to have been any deep-laid plan for a political career in the farmer boy's mind when he began life among the oxcarts and hand looms of those early days in the South following the war. Nor yet when he had acquired his own acres and entered into the business life of the community. He was chosen a member of the state board of agriculture and served on the prison board.

Then one day it was decided to run him for the state senate. He was elected and served for a term. Congress was next, but there was a sort of unwritten law in his district that one term was all a man could expect, for Republicans and Democrats had always swapped terms.

But Doughton changed all that. Or at least his constituents did. When he had served his term in the 62nd congress, instead of retiring him, as had been the custom, the voters sent him right back again, and they have been doing it ever since.

There isn't any question that Robert L. Doughton likes his job in Washington. But it's equally true that when the session is over, he likes to hie himself back to his Carolina hills and enjoy life there.

Around the capital he has the reputation as being as good a judge of men as he is of horses. He's easy to talk to, likes a story, and can size up human as well as horse flesh while he is telling one.

This year President Truman's request for six billion dollars more in taxes, including some social security withholding levies, will get very careful scrutiny before it becomes law. Meanwhile, Doughton's committee has to take care of the bill to extend reciprocal trade treaties. Also, studies will begin on the subject of extending social security benefits. There is in addition the matter of certain revisions in the basic tax code.

But Representative Doughton is used to rabbit stew.

The biggest peacetime budget ever submitted to a congress ($41,858,000,000) has its opponents, too. Rep Charles Halleck (R., Ind.), former GOP majority leader, and Rep. John Taber (R., N. Y.), former chairman of the house appropriations committee, look grimly at the voluminous budget, promise a fierce fight to slash all spending proposals.

AROUND THE HOUSE

A homemaker should know the variations in type and quality in order to make wise purchases of cotton sheets. Top grade sheets are marked by numerals which denote the number of threads per square inch. Whether percale or muslin, the higher the number of threads the higher the rating in durability and longevity. Fabric experts recommend silky smooth percales for luxury sheets, but say when thrift is the major consideration, buy muslin for durability and longer wear.

In baking with brown sugar all lumps should be removed from the sugar before measuring. This may be done with a rolling pin. The sugar should then be packed tightly into the measuring cup.

Marbleized or grained patterns or mosaic designs are a good choice for kitchen linoleum since they are easier to keep looking clean than a plain color.

Not Too Salty—but Plenty of Salt

The sea may not be exactly saturated with salt—a hundred parts of sea water contains only between three and four parts of a salt water mixture of which about 2.7 per cent is ordinary common salt.

However, using the approximate 145,000,000 square miles of water covering the globe as a factor, the total amount of salt in the sea figures out to be about 45,500,000,000,000 tons: and if the seas suddenly dried up, the salt deposits left in their beds would be some 200 yards thick—enough to cover all Europe with a layer of salt between 4 and 5 miles deep.

HIGHER QUALITY CROPS PRODUCE HEALTHY HUMANS

CHICAGO — Soil conservation measures building the fertility of our farm lands can do more to improve the nation's peacetime health standards than all the pills and drug store panaceas put together, according to a statement made public here by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"Human health depends on the soil," the statement points out. "If the soil is fertile, then the crops it produces will build strong bodies and sturdy physical characteristics. If the soil is poor, the crops it produces will be deficient in vitamins, minerals and proteins necessary for insuring healthy humans.

Fertile Soils Build Healthy Bodies

"The remedy for diet deficiencies lies in putting essential minerals in the form of mixed fertilizers into Nature's hands so that she can fabricate them into health - building foods for the human body."

How Much Government?

It's 2,272 miles from New York to Salt Lake City, Utah. Yet, if all the civilian employees in the executive branch of our federal government were six feet tall (they're not), and you placed them head to toe on U. S. Highway 30, they'd reach the distance easily with 1.4 miles to spare. This comparison is conservative. It was based on an estimate of 2 million government workers in the executive branch alone.

Perhaps nobody can ever know just how many there are. During the first four months of this year, they increased at a rate of more than 450 a day. Use another comparison. There is one executive worker in the federal government for every 21 income taxpayers. In other words, these 21 taxpayers are paying the salary of the 22nd man. And that's just in the executive arm of the federal government.

Paying the Piper

Each and every American citizen must not fail to be interested in this problem of mushrooming government. As long as we fool ourselves into the habit of asking for more government, we'll see more and more added to the payrolls and we'll pay higher and higher taxes. We need to decide how much government we want. Certainly the more of it we set up the more we have to pay for. At the rate we have been going in the last decade, most of us will be working for the government in a few years.

That would be one of the simplest ways to take the country into socialism. Let most of us be drawing paychecks from the government, in salaries and various benefits, and we would have socialism right here without voting for it. What we need constantly to remember is that the government has not a cent to spend except what it collects from you and me and from our neighbors.

It's Up to Congress

Our next Congress will have a real test, and a real opportunity. Last year, the 80th Congress provided this historic opportunity by establishing a commission to study the reorganization of the executive side of our government. Membership of the Commission includes some of our most public spirited citizens. These experts are giving the structure and functions of many a government agency a thorough going over. They are also studying expenditures, with the idea of proposing changes that will bring both economy and efficiency.

Must Say: "No!"

The 81st Congress will have the job of acting upon whatever recommendations the Commission may present. It is not an easy task. Any executive finds it hard to lop off an office here, and an office there. When the government starts a service, it is hard to find a stopping place. Moreover, each and every department will fight to the finish for increased personnel and more money.

May the coming Congress find enough gizzard and gristle to stand up and say no. We must end waste and extravagance in government. When nearly thirty cents out of every dollar you earn goes directly or indirectly toward support of federal government, that is too much. We cannot continue to be the strong and financially stable nation we must be, unless something is done to curtail the spread of government.

Duke Gets His Tractor

Duke Thomas bought a farm with the money he'd saved in the Service, but he couldn't get a tractor. He needed it badly, but was tenth on the local dealer's list.

"Tell you what," old man Peters says. "If those nine fellows ahead of you agree, you'll get the next one I get in." "No, thanks," says Duke, "I'll just take my turn."

But old Peters mails out nine postcards. And the other day he tells Duke his tractor will be in next week. "I simply wrote the facts to the fellows ahead of you. They decided it."

From where I sit, it's that spirit of understanding that helps make our democracy so great. Understanding for the other fellow's problems and respect for the other fellow's rights—whether it's his right to earn a living, his right to cast his vote against your candidate, or even his right to enjoy a moderate, friendly glass of beer or ale—if and when he chooses. Let's always keep it that way!

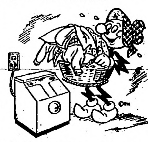
Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

I was scooting along the high-line near Battle Lake (Minn.) one Monday not long ago, and feeling pretty good. (I figure I'd helped about 40,000 housewives wash clothes that morning . . . to say nothing of the meals I'd cooked, plus all the motors I'd turned.) All of a sudden I spotted an Otter Tail Power Company service truck on the highway and decided to drop down for a visit.



Who should be driving the car but my old pal Leonard Martinson! I was just sitting down beside him, comfortable like, and shaking a couple kinks of static electricity out of my leg, when what does Leonard do! He picks up a phone and starts talking into it — right there on the highway while we're driving!

The next thing I know he's turned the truck around and is headed in the other direction. "Where we going?" I asks. "Just had a call," Leonard says, "there's a tree across the 6600 volt line on Lake Blanche. Gotta clear the line — quick!"

"Well, cut my circuit and call me shorty!" I exclaimed. "You mean you got that information — over the phone — right here in the truck, while we're driving?" Well . . . while Leonard fixed the line, I helped Fred Waring come through the radio into about 72,000 homes. Then, on the way back to Fergus Falls, Leonard told me the story . . .

Seems as though I've been so busy speeding around over Otter Tail's 5,803 miles of transmission lines that I hadn't learned about the new Mobile Unit Communication System. All our service cars and trucks within a 50-mile radius can contact the home office over a radio-telephone, through a telephone company transmitter tower connected with the Bell Telephone exchange in Fergus Falls.

Gary Sunby, son of Melvin Sunby in our Engineering Department, gets a big kick wearing his Dad's climbers, dreaming of the day when he can serve Otter Tail customers.

It sure speeds up trouble shooting. Without it, Leonard would have gone all the way back to Fergus before he found out about the trouble at Lake Blanche. Radio-telephone enabled him to restore service in a few minutes.

These modern inventions are sure wonderful. Something else worthwhile talking about are the eleven new plants and additions the Otter Tail Power Company completed in 1948! I've got 26,600 more kilowatts helping me now than before — at Jamestown, Hoot Lake (Fergus), Crookston, Oakes, Lake Preston, Britton, Mahnomen, Casselton, Waubay, Bottineau, and Lisbon.

'Course, it's just like T. C. says (that's Tom Wright, the Otter Tail Power Company president): "Reddy, we are a public utility — never forget the real meaning of those words. Our only justification for existence is to SERVE the public above everything else — and we're going to keep on building plants and improving our service until EVERYBODY has ALL the electricity they want."

And of course you know me, your old friend Reddy — I'll do my part. Just make sure your electric wiring, your home appliances and motors are in good shape, so I can do a good job.

1.2 That by proceedings heretofore duly taken by and before the District Court in and for the Fourteenth Judicial District of the State of Minnesota, it has been determined to make repairs to Judicial Ditch No. 17, located in Polk and Marshall Counties, and pursuant to the order of said Court directing said repairs, the County Auditor has duly filed and caused to be recorded a tabular lien statement for said ditch, showing the total cost of repairs thereto to be made within Marshall County, and such total cost is therein prorated to each tract and property effected thereby, in direct proportion to the benefits thereon, and the amount each such tract and property will be liable for in such prorata share less the amount of damages thereto, and in no case exceeds the benefits heretofore determined to accrue for such tract or property.

1.3 That the total amount of assessments levied for benefits accruing from the construction and repairs of said ditches are heretofore determined by the orders of this Board and of said Court, and as shown by the said lien statements and the references to the records in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Marshall County where such tabular statements appear, are as follows:

Ditch	Assessment	Recording Data

County No. 39	6,152.25	Dec. 24, 1948
Judicial No. 17	498.95	Nov. 23, 1948
Total	$ 41,691.70

1.4 That the liens so filed and recorded are payable to the County Treasurer in ten equal consecutive annual installments for County Ditches Nos. 38 and 39, commencing November 1, 1949 and ending November 1, 1958, and in five equal consecutive annual installments for Judicial Ditch No. 17, commencing November 1, 1949 and ending November 1, 1953 and are collectible in the respective ensuing years, with interest on unpaid installments at the same rate as the bonds herein authorized to be issued, in the same manner as real estate taxes.

Some New Weed Killers Give Excellent Results

New weed killers to supplement 2,4-D are appearing with good reports. Quack grass and crab grass are two weed pests which 2,4-D does not control. IPC was developed in England during the war and now is giving good results in the control of quack grass, stolons and seedings, in tests conducted by the U. S. department of agriculture. It is harmless to persons and to some broadleaf plants.

Short Shifts

"You're not the same baby sitter we left here at seven with our Ruby Mae," gasped the matron, coming in at midnight.

"No, I'm not," replied the girl, calmly. "Marcelline, the sitter you hired, had a special phone call and her sister took over for her at 8:30. Then her sister got a call and I took over at 10:15. And if you hadn't come soon there would have been a neighbor on the job."

How to Hurt

On the bus, two giddy young things were discussing men.

"Tell me, Marjorie," said the unsophisticated one, "what do you do if a man persists in asking for a dance—and you hate him?"

"Tell him your card's full," answered the knowing one.

"Is that all?" asked the first.

"Oh, goodness, no," said the smart one. "Say it is—and then let him see it isn't."

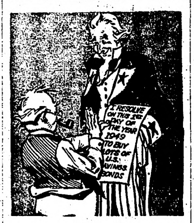
Uncle Sam Says



I RESOLVE ON THIS 1ST DAY OF THE YEAR 1949 TO BUY LOTS OF U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Here's one big, safe resolution for 1949: "Resolved, I will take advantage of the opportunity presented by my government to buy U. S. Savings Bonds regularly; the finest, safest and most convenient investment in the world." If you stop to think of it there's no better time than right now to start building a comfortable cushion for later years. Upon maturity, U. S. Savings Bonds will return to you four dollars for every three dollars you put into them. They can be bought regularly under two convenient purchasing plans, the Payroll Savings Plan where you are employed or the Bond-a-Month Plan at your bank.

MINIATURE . . . Probably the world's youngest golfer is 2-year-old Robert Mallick Jr., of Pittsburgh. He has been golfing ever since he was given a set of toy clubs on his first Christmas. Now he plays with a solid-shaft iron mashie.

ABILITY WITH DISABILITY . . . Physical handicaps can be overcome, as so many courageous persons have proved. Henry J. Weigman of Cicero, Ill., born without arms, is one of them. He decided he could use his mouth for something besides talking and eating. Thus, he became an artist.

Strange Place for It

A certain well-loved society woman was recently able to return to her normal activities after a rather lengthy sojourn in a hospital. Her first outing included a brief shopping tour.

"I declare it's good to see you back, Mrs. H. . . . ," said one friendly saleslady. "We heard you were in the hospital. Would you mind telling us what your trouble was?"

"Not at all," replied the cheerful convalescent. "I had a foot taken out of my intestine."

"Gracious goodness!" gasped the astounded saleslady. "How in the world did it get there?"

Seemed That Way

A MAN got off the train after a cross-country trip, went to a hotel and virtually fell into bed. The hotel was situated near a railroad yard, and all night long the freight engines shunted freight cars around — crashing and banging. Whistles and bells sounded nearly all night.

The man fought the noise until about 6 a. m., then reached for the 'phone and yelled for the clerk.

"For goodness sake," he inquired wearily, "what time does this hotel get to Chicago?"

NO PLACE TO START

The Newlyweds were giving their first turkey dinner. Since her husband was a novice at carving Mrs. Newlywed insisted on his learning to carve from her new cook book, lest he display his ignorance before the guests.

The turkey later was placed before the inexperienced host, who was plainly at a loss to know how to begin.

"Go on, dear, carve it. You know exactly how to do it," whispered the loyal young wife.

"Of course I do, but I can't find any of the dotted lines," came back the troubled answer.

Tell-Tale Evidence

A young man at college sent his laundry home, and when his mother opened it she nearly wept — his handkerchiefs were all tinged with lipstick.

"Oh, Mother, be sensible," her daughter commiserated; "you couldn't expect him to go forever without having a girl."

"I know," fretted the mother; "but look, there's a different color on every handkerchief."

KNOW YOUR BREED

Morgan Horse

By W. J. DRYDEN

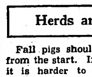
Justin Morgan was the fountainhead of the first great family of American horses. The Morgan strain secured its name from the man who bred the original Morgan horse and owned him until late in 1795.

For 150 years Americans have been proud to claim Morgan blood in their horses. It implied energy, courage, bottom and excellent saddle horse. The breed is being perpetuated at the United States Morgan horse farm, Middlebury, Vt. In height it ranges from 14.2 hands to 15.2 hands, with 15 hands being given preference.

Good example of a Morgan horse.

Herds and Flocks

Fall pigs should be kept gaining from the start. If they stop gaining it is harder to get them started again, and it takes more feed. Don't let them lose their milk fat.



Keep weeds cut under your electric fence, to prevent grounding. Set the posts at an angle and you can keep the weeds cut with the mowing machine.

Flush ewes before the breeding season—that is, feed them generously so they will be gaining at breeding time. Changing from scant to good pasture, or feeding some grain, will put the ewes in better condition. Flushing results in more certain breeding.

Cows due to freshen in late fall should be dried off and given eight weeks of vacation to get ready for the blessed event. During this rest period, feed a fitting ration to keep the cow in good flesh and help develop the calf.

Really Gets Around

"WHAT kind of fellow are you?" she demanded.

"Last night you proposed to me, 10 minutes later you proposed to another girl down the block and 15 minutes later it was a girl on the other side of the street. How could you do such a thing?"

"Easy," he answered cheerfully, "I've got a bicycle."

Railroad Safety

During the year 1947 there were fewer fatalities on United States railroads than in any other year on record. The previous low in that respect was in 1939 when traffic, measured in ton-miles and passenger-miles, was only one-half as great as in 1947. Nonfatal injuries, on the other hand, were considerably greater than the 1939 total, though not so numerous as in the war years, when freight and passenger traffic was at peak levels. Comparing 1947 with 1946, total fatalities to all classes of persons numbered 4,186, a reduction of 176 or 4.0 per cent under 1946. Nonfatal injuries numbered 48,780 in 1947, a reduction of 3,227 or 66.2 per cent under 1946.

Tzintzuntazan

At the time of the Spanish conquest, Tzintzuntazan, in the state of Michoacan, west of Mexico City, was the center of the Tarascan empire, second in importance only to the Aztecs. Tzintzuntazan today is a place of about 1,000 people, of mixed Spanish and Indian blood, who have lost a great many elements of their ancient culture which made them the chief rivals of the people of Montezuma, notes the Smithsonian institution. The Spaniards described a city of 40,000, although this figure undoubtedly included rather widespread suburbs.

Insured Farm Loans Available

Insured farm loans are now available through the Farmers Home Administration. The Insured loan is something new in rural credit, and opens up a new source of credit to farmers who want to buy, enlarge or make improvements on their farms.

While most of the money thus far has been provided by country banks, other loans have been made by individuals. They bear interest at the rate of 4% per annum, with the lender netting 3% and the Farmers Home Administration receiving 1% for insurance and administration expense.

Farm families unable to secure adequate credit elsewhere may qualify for these loans, Joel P. Rosengren, County Supervisor of the Farmers Home Administration at Thief River Falls, said today.

Loans are made to construct, repair or make improvements on the house, barn, sheds or other farm buildings; to install or repair electrical or water systems for the home and barn, drainage or tiling, clearing land or providing money for basic soil treatmtnt. The Farmers Home Administration also also makes and insures loans to enlarge farms too small now to be efficient.

In these loans, money will also be included to refinance the borrower's present indebtedness if any, against the farm.

Thieves Enter Holt Cafe

The Holt Cafe was robbed on Thursday night last week. The thieves gained entrance by breaking the heavy plate glass in the front door. About $5.00 in small change was all they found. Sheriff Toftner was notified of the theft and began a thorough check at once. It is believed that the robbery is linked with the thefts at Young's Store at Middle River that same night.

Paste Batter

A fine clear paste is made by simply boiling rice in water until it is reduced to a fine, thick paste.

Bills Ask For Law Enforcements

Two measures advanced in the interest of law enforcement reached the Minnesota Legislature this week.

One proposal, recommended by Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl and widely supported by law enforcement offcials, provides for uniform closing of on-sale liquor and beer establishments through out the state. A bill carrying out this plan, introduced in the Senate by Senators Miller, Butler and Dietz and if approved, liquor and beer establishments will close at midnight each week day except Saturday and at 1 a. m. on Saturday night, in all parts of the state. Beer places would not open on Sunday.

Having different closing hours for different communities has resulted in numerous accidents, as parties have rushed from early to late drinking places, law enforcement offcials say. Support for uniform closing has been quite widespread.

Senators Wahlstrand, Butler, and Almen introduced a bill which would give state liquor inspectors the power to make arrests and serve warrants. The bill also would give them the right to enter, make a search and seize liquor unlawfully held in any premises licensed for sale of alcoholic beverages or in connecting rooms. A similar bill, but with broader provisions for search, was presented to the 1947 Legislature, but was defeated. In the restricted form, authors of the proposal expect to get it passed. Gov. Youngdahl says work of the inspectors will be facilitated if they are allowed to make arrests when discovering violations just as game wardens and highway patrolmen may do.

Better Bees on Way

Bees that sting less, gather more honey and resist disease soon will be available as a result of new discoveries in breeding. Applying methods used in artificially breeding dairy cows and in producing hybrid corn, scientists have found ways to control queen mating. Thereby they are working to produce superior honey-makers—bees not so anxious to sting, and willing to work harder. They will also produce better pollinizers and bees more resistant to foulbrood.

Law For Turn Signals

Observance of the law requiring drivers to signal before making right or left turns is expected to improve as mechanical turn signals come into more general use, according to a Minnesota Highway bulletin. Two provisions now in the state traffic act will soon require their use on an increasing number of motor vehicles.

A section of the 1947 law requires that all new motor vehicles sold in the state after July 1 1949, must be equipped with approved mechanical turn signals.

An older law requires that when any vehicle loaded so that arm signals are not visible both front and rear, day and night, signals must be given by an approved lamp or device. Only turn signals which use flashing light are approved for sale or use in Minnesota.
